Leavening Strength Tells the Story

The price you pay for baking powder doesn't determine the results you will have on bake day—it's the leavening strength that counts.

You may buy a baking powder for less than Calumet and think you are practicing economy. Don't be misled—the bakings you spoil will make those that are successful exorbitant in cost.

has successfully proven, during the past thirty years, that it contains more than the ordinary leavening strength. That's why bakings where it is employed never fail to raise properly. Calumet is used by more housewives, leading chefs, domestic scientists, restaurants, hotels and railroads than any other brand. Millions buy it—you should try it.

A pound can of Calumet contains full 16 oz. Some baking powder comes in 12 oz. cans instead of 16 oz. cans. Be sure you get a pound when you want it.

MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

CHAPTER 304

HOW MADGE MANAGED TO MANAGE THE SITUATION.

It was a bit of work for a minute or two for Alfred Durkee and me to carry his mother up to her room. We laid her upon the bed, whose thrown-back bed clothing and rumbled pillow showed that she had been in it before making her nocturnal journey down the stairs. My little neighbor had only a light kimono thrown over her nightdress, while her bare feet were thrust into dainty, high-heeled slippers of the kind she always affected.

"Look at those," Alfred groaned in masculine exasperation. "no wonder she stumbled. And whatever took her down those stairs? What shall I bring you? Some water? And the doctor—"

"The water, please, and DICKY has telephoned for Dr. Gibson. I was straightening the little woman's feet, and I saw in a moment the cause of her swooning. One foot and ankle were already swollen nearly double their size. She evidently had tripped upon her high heels, tried to save herself and her foot had been twisted under her. Whether or not there were broken bones or simply a nasty sprain, I, of course, could not tell until a physician came, indeed, had no time to determine.

Before Alfred returned with the water I had straightened her body comfortably in bed, and was searching her dressing table for the powerful smelling salts I knew she kept there. I placed them beneath her nostrils, and when Alfred returned—man-like with a trail of water dripping over himself and the rug—I had him change her hands while I dashed the water into her face.

A Different Dicky.

As we worked we heard the door open and close downstairs. In another moment Dicky came hurriedly into the room.

"What can I do?" he asked quietly, all the captiousness evidently suppressed or eliminated.

"Take my place here just a minute," I said. I opened my mouth to tell him how to sprinkle the water in Mrs. Durkee's face, reflected that a veteran of the army ought to know something about first aid, regretted my caution when I saw him throwing the water with such vigor as to saturate my little friend's night dress.

Inside the minute I had named I was back with a pungent restorative which I set on a chair by the bedside, ready to administer it the first second I saw that Mrs. Durkee was able to swallow. Then I took the water basin from Dicky's hands.

"Do you think you could find the coffee things in the kitchen?" I asked, remembering his justifiable pride in his coffee making. "We shall need some hot, strong coffee here quickly. And what did Dr. Gibson say?"

"He'll be here as soon as he can get out his car and run over. As for the coffee, I've helped Alf root it out too often over here not to know where it is. I'll have some for you pronto."

The patient Commands.

"Turn on the hot water heater," I called after him as he hurried toward the stairs. "We'll need hot water for hot water bags as soon as you can get it ready."

"All right. Leave it to your uncle," he called back cheerily, and I think the tone did more to compose Alfred Durkee than anything else could have done. Alfred loves his mother dearly, and I saw that this seizure of hers had done something months of active campaigning had not achieved, made him panic-stricken as a nervous schoolgirl.

The hand chafing and the cold water kept up a minute or two longer and brought back my little friend to consciousness. She moaned with pain as she opened her eyes, and then in the next second shivered.

"So cold," she murmured, and I saw that something must be done immediately about the soaked night dress.

"Drink this," I commanded, putting the pungent restorative to her lips.

"Oh, I can't!" she said plaintively.

"You must." I returned with decision, and by sheer force of will I put it down her. Then I turned to Alfred. "Bring me a pair of scissors and that heavy sweater of your mother's," I said.

"Oh! What are you going to do?" she asked as he hurried to the bedside with the articles for which I had asked.

"I'll make Dicky buy you a new one," I said cheerfully, "because he soaked this one throwing water on you. But I've got to get this wet night dress off you, and this is the only way to do it."

I had the scissors at the neck of the gown when she pushed my hand away indignantly. "This is one of my best gowns. I couldn't buy one like it again in these shoddy times. You shan't touch it."

I felt like shaking her, but I saw that carrying my point would only mean a scene which would agitate her therefore with a shrug of my shoulders I turned to Alfred.

"Bring me some heavy Turkish towels," I said. "I'll stuff them under the soaked portions of the gown. That will help to do until the doctor comes."

The Well-Dressed Woman

By AGNES AYRES.
Star in Paramount Pictures.

There has never been a period in the world's history, not even the wonderful Italian Renaissance, whose influence has been so enduring, so far reaching, so immeasurably above all others as the time of the glory of Greece.

We borrow from Spain, from Italy, from Egypt, from the mid-Victorians, the Renaissance, from Turkey and China, but always we return to our old and best love, Greece.

This coming spring, I think, we are to see Spanish and mid-Victorian elaborateness and bouffancy pale out and disappear before the slim and austere beauty of the Greek silhouette. The majority of the evening frocks for Southern wear are Greek in tendency, as are many of the elaborate negligees.

In the sketch is a new evening dress that is purely and unmistakably Greek. There is absolutely no trimming, nothing to mar or detract from the perfect grace of the lines of the drapery. It is of cream white crepe, after the French mode, and girdled with a narrow belt of jet and ivory disks.

There is one very serious disadvantage, in the Greek influence, it may not be attempted save by the master hand. The drapery so beguilingly and deceitfully simple may be utterly ruined by one false touch. But he who runs may read its history and feel the charm of this frock.

Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Apperson, Miss Milton and Miss Hembree of McMinnville, were Sunday callers at the A. J. Bewley home.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Ward, Mr. and Mrs. H. Hull and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Pritchett and daughter and Fern Baker of Gaston, were Sunday visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Grisham.

The prevailing epidemic of grip has struck the Sheridan schools hard, as a large majority of pupils in all departments is out of school.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Almost every one knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago, the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.—Adv.
