

ASPIRANTS TO OFFICES SLOW

Comparatively Few Have Filed Declarations With Secretary of State

TIME IS GROWING SHORT

Scores of Places to Fill Pre-emptive Rush at State House Shortly

Considerably fewer candidates for nominations to be made by the Republican and Democratic parties at the primary election, May 19, have been filed up to this time, than had been formally presented at the corresponding date preceding the primaries in 1920, according to a statement made by Secretary of State Sam A. Koser.

With the time limit for filing candidates' petitions and declarations only 28 days away, not over 5 per cent of the filings which could normally be expected have been received.

The last date for filing falls on April 14, which is 35 days prior to the primary election.

Lethargy shown by the 290 contestants who in 1920 presented their candidates for selection by the voters of the Republican party to contend for offices to be filled at the general election, more than 40 had formally filed their platforms and slogans with the secretary of state a month prior to the last date fixed by law for entering the race.

About the same ratio prevailed with reference to the Democratic candidates, who numbered 78 on the closing day.

This year there are 107 state and district offices to be filled but to date 24 Republicans and three Democrats have arranged for a place on the ballot by filing officially.

High Places to Fill

The higher offices for which nominations will be made are those of national committeemen, representatives in congress from the first, second and third congressional districts, governor, state treasurer, three justices of the supreme court, superintendent of public instruction, labor commissioner, and commissioner of the public service commission (state at large). In this group, the only candidates who have formally filed are Dr. J. W. Morrow, Democrat, for national committeeman; Franklin F. Korell, Republican, for congressman, third district; and C. H. Gramm, Republican, for labor commissioner.

An aggregate of 17 places on the circuit bench, in 10 judicial districts, has brought out only six formal filings. Judges Percy R. Kelly and George G. Bingham, Republicans, have filed for renomination in the first district, composed of Linn and Marion counties and James N. Davis, Republican, seeks the nomination for department No. 5 in the Multnomah county district. Judge T. E. J. Duffy of Bend, Democrat, and Judge George R. Bagley, of Hillsboro, Republican, have filed for renomination in the 18th and 19th districts, respectively, and O. B. Setters, of Astoria, Republican, has secured a place on the ballot for nomination in the 20th district.

Seats Not Attractive

A. M. LaFollett, Louis Lachmund, and George W. Hubbs, Republicans, have formally declared for the two Marion county seats in the state senate. L. N. Curl, of Albany, seeks the Republican nomination in the second senatorial district, and John B. Bell, of Eugene, Republican, asks for nomination in the third district. Ben C. Sheldon of Medford, and Edward H. Belknap of Monroe, both Republicans, seek promotion from the lower house to the respective senatorial seats allotted to the sixth and ninth districts, and Milton R. Klepper, of Portland, has filed for the one full-term seat to be filled by the voters of Multnomah county this year. Renomination in the 12th senatorial district is sought by Colon R. Eberhard of La Grande, Republican.

Multnomah Slow

There exists a still greater paucity of formally declared candidates for the 60 seats in the lower house of the legislature. For the 13 places allotted to the 18th district, Multnomah county, only five, namely, Arthur B. Carlson, W. C. North, William F. Woodward, O. W. Hosford, and R. H. Haynes, all Republicans and residents of Portland have thus far filed. Thomas B. Kay of Salem, and D. E. Fletcher of Independence, Republicans, have entered in the first and 11th districts, respectively. Two Republican candidates, Herbert Egbert of The Dalles, and Frank M. Gill, of Dufur, have qualified to contend for the one membership from the 12th district, and the filing of Sherman M. Miles of St. Helens, Democrat, for renomination in the 20th district completes the list.

CHAPTER 323

HOW ROBERT SAVARIN THRILLED MADGE BY THE DECLARATION OF HIS DETERMINATION ABOUT LILLIAN.

Robert Savarin spent the entire forenoon preceding Lillian's arrival in the company of his teenage lady's small daughter. Marion led him all over the Durkee place and ours, and if there was a tree or a bush, a flower or a chicken on the two places whose acquaintance he did not make; whose family history he did not learn, it wasn't Marion's fault.

At 11 o'clock I went in search of them, and found them in the rowboat on the little lake at the foot of the garden. The artist, looking extremely happy and supremely uncomfortable, was sitting in one end of the rowboat, while Marion in the middle, flushed and determined, was rowing him about the lake.

Marion has learned to row in child fashion since she has been with us, the little lake, in no place being over three feet deep being an ideally safe place for juveniles, and she is naturally anxious to display the accomplishment. That the boat leaks slightly, and that her oars are apt to slip, sending splashes of water over her passengers, are matters of supreme indifference to Marion although in other situations she is prettily solicitous concerning the comfort of her elders. But on the subject of rowing her brain is single-tracked and enthusiastic.

A Happy Couple.

"Hoo-o! Marion!" I called. "Time to meet mother!" She turned the boat so quickly that Mr. Savarin nearly lost his balance. I caught a glimpse of modish masculine shoes describing an arc toward the sky and held my breath as the artist righted himself with an effort. "Oh-h. Uncle Robert, I'm so sorry!" the child exclaimed. "I guess you're not very used to rowboats, are you?" with impudence as unconscious as it was amusing. "I guess I'm not, sweetheart," he answered, and they were near enough now for me to see the fond twinkle in his eyes as he looked at her, "not this kind, anyway. But I'll learn it if you'll help me."

"I'll take you out for hours every day you're here," Marion declared, with her words strongly italicized, and Mr. Savarin laughed outright as he met my amused eyes.

"Are we going to meet mother with the car, Auntie Madge?" Marion queried, and in the same breath: "May I put on my pink dress?"

"Surely, dear," I returned, "but you must hurry. We haven't very much time. Uncle Robert will excuse you if you'll run, I know."

She tied her boat and skipped away with a backward wave of the hand. Robert Savarin's eyes followed her fondly, and I knew his thoughts from the sigh that involuntarily escaped his lips. But the next instant a totally different expression crossed his face, and he looked at me with a rueful smile.

Can Lillian Resist?

"Marion is not the only one who will have to change," he said, glancing down at his bespattered and rumpled clothing, so trim and immaculate an hour before. "Marion's seamanship is rather trying," I laughed, then added practically: "If you will give your things to Katie when you come down again I can promise you they will be returned to their pristine freshness. Dicky says she's a wizard."

"Thank you, that is very kind," he said perfunctorily, and with his mind palpably elsewhere. We had almost reached the house when he spoke again.

"Will you have room in your car for me to go to the station also?"

"Oh, surely!" I exclaimed. "You must pardon my remissness, but I had hesitated to ask you because—"

"Because you thought I might shrink from first meeting the woman I love before the eyes of other people," he finished, smiling down at my chagrined astonishment. "My dear lady, that would have been very true six months ago, but that time has passed for me. Let us speak plainly, once for all. It has only been within the last few months that I have completely lost the haunting fear that some day there might come over me again that awful cloud—"

He stopped and I fairly held my breath, remembering the 15 years of mental loss to which he referred.

"The best specialists long ago assured me that I need never fear its return," he went on, "and now my own inner consciousness confirms their decision. At last I am a man again, among men!"

He flung his hands wide with a sudden dramatic gesture—"and, make no mistake, I shall use all my returned strength to claim and protect what should be my own by all the laws of God and nature, if not of man."

As he went on to his room with a little courteous inclination of the head I felt my pulses thrill with excitement and admiration.

Would Lillian be able to resist such impassioned persuasion as Robert Savarin's?
