"Whenever a new book comes out, I read an old one," said Charles Lamb. Good suggestion, though one should not overlook all the new ones, either.
"Over here Socialism is opposed to a standing army through fear that such an army may be used to put it down; over in Russia it favors a standing army for there it is necessary to have a standing army to maintain it," remarks the Marion Star, the newspaper of President Harding.

Some leading Frenchmen are growing cynical. If America wants money that the allies have managed to get from Germany, roundly declares the Paris Matin, let America help collect. No less pointed is the suggestion of the semi-official Temps that the United States might either get its money direct from Germany or ratify the treaty of Versailles.

Great Britain proposes to the allies a division of the German indemnity into two parts, one of $11,000,000,000 which would not be collected if the United States should remit the equal sum owed to it by the allies, and the other including all the rest. The proposal bears a family resemblance to the suggestion which has several times been made that the United States accept German bonds in lieu of bonds of entente countries.
