

County Treasurers Are Limited in Securities

County treasurers are not authorized by law to accept from banks designated by them as depositories of county funds security in the form of bonds executed by personal securities. This is according to an opinion given by Attorney General J. H. Van Winkle for Lily Stipp, district attorney for Clackamas county. The reason for the interpretation is that the surety bonds authorized to be accepted in such cases are specifically designated by the statute as bonds executed by duly authorized surety companies as surety. It is explained in the opinion that a county treasurer, acting under the depository law, is excluded from responsibility for the safekeeping of such funds and furnishing the security for the safe-keeping of the funds as provided by law. But if he accepts other securities instead of those required by law, he and his bondsmen are responsible.

MILLION DOLLAR FILM HOLDS THEM

New Attendance Records Everywhere Are Looking for Masterpiece

"Foolish Wives" bids fair to establish new attendance records over the entire country. The picture is now in its seventh week at the Mission theater in Los Angeles and its fourth week at the Imperial theater, San Francisco, with no apparent abatement in attendance. In San Francisco it is said that the opening week grossed something like $7500 more than any picture that has ever played the house. During these low cinematic times that increase would prove a very satisfactory gross by itself to a number of houses. "Foolish Wives" comes to the Grand Sunday for five days.

CHAPTER 327 WHAT HARRY UNDERWOOD DECLARED TO MADE.

The speech Harry Underwood made to Lillian was one which could not help but anger a woman furiously, leave her with no lingering feeling of duty or remorse toward the man who made it. As Lillian jumped to her feet and crossed quickly to Robert Savarin's side I wondered curiously if it had not been carefully planned for just that effect. "You beast!" Lillian said as she passed him, and Harry Underwood smiled mockingly at the epithet.

"Come away at once," Robert Savarin spoke tremulously yet authoritatively as she reached his side, and without a backward glance they turned toward the footbridge. Alice Holcombe had slipped away in the opposite direction a few minutes before, but as I started to follow her Harry Underwood put out his arm and blocked my way.

"Why the haste, Lady Fair?" he asked mockingly. "I'm not the plague, although you think I'm next door to it. And I want you to know before I vamoose out of here for another spell of wandering that most of that spiel to old Lil was pure bunk. There ain't no pulchritudinous femina waiting for yours truly, and I hold Lil higher than any other woman in the world—except one. But that ingrowing conscience of hers would never let her make that old pappy guy of an artist happy as long as she thought I needed her. So it was up to me to convince her that I didn't Savy?"

"I Could Have—"

There was that in his voice and manner which showed his contempt for the frail physical endowment of Robert Savarin. Harry Underwood, splendid, virile animal, with the stupendous conceit common to his type, could not understand the attraction Robert Savarin's wonderful genius and royal heart had for a woman. There was a certain touch of unselfishness in the thing he had done, however, that made me feel more kindly toward him. After all, he had fulfilled his promise "to clear out of Lillian's way." "Just one thing more, little girl." His voice was devoid of all mockery now, and held a note which I had heard in it only once or twice before. "My job around here now is finished, that Wilsey won't bother you again, and I'm goin' to fly the coop for furrin parts. But don't mistake your Unele Dudley. I have ways of keeping track of you, and if the Dicky-bird isn't square with you I'll wring his neck and steal the cage myself. Or if you ever need me in any other way I'll be on the job. Oh, girl, girl! Why didn't the devil let me find you years ago? I could have made you care. I know it."

Taken by Surprise.

Before I knew what he was doing he had caught me to him, kissed me fervently once then before I could wrench my hand free to strike at him he released me, plinked my hands, held me at arms' length and looked down at me with the old mocking light and something else in his eyes.

"The Dicky-bird ought not to grudge that to me," he said. "I'll warrant he snatches one or two himself. Good-by, Lady Fair. Be good to yourself."

I walked back to the house slowly, trying to compose myself so that no one should guess the bizarre nature of Harry Underwood's farewell. As I neared the house I met Robert Savarin, pale and agitated, coming down the path, evidently in search of me. "Dear Mrs. Graham," he said abruptly. "will you pardon me if I go to town for a few days? I think Lillian should be left to herself for a little. This has been a terrible shock to her." "I think you are wise," I agreed. "only there is one thing you must do first, and that is to assure her of your unchanged and undying affection. Otherwise she might imagine that the brutal declaration of her husband that he did not want her might have changed your value of her."

"Horrible!" He stared at me in terror. "You don't think she could imagine that?" "I returned," "but women are curious creatures, Lillian has been through a terrible strain, and I think she would be helped and comforted if she was reassured of your love just now."

"I will go to her at once," he said, starting off hurriedly, and I knew by his very haste that he had been asinine enough to announce his departure to Lillian without any explanation, imagining that he was being especially adroit in a delicate situation by so doing.

What passed between them, I of course, don't know, but when I next saw Lillian she declined dinner, and shut herself up in her room until the next afternoon; her face was calmer, happier than I had seen it for a long while. She made no reference to either Harry Underwood or Robert Savarin, but handed me a telegram when we found ourselves alone together.

"Will arrive at 5 o'clock this afternoon."

Chorus of Eighty Voices Feature of Performance

The high school chorus of 80 voices will be a feature of the musical comedy to be given tonight by the musical department at the senior high school. "Paul Revere" is considered an especially taking musical comedy. It is being given under the direction of Miss Lena Belle Tartar.

Under a civil service rule just promulgated, veterans' wives and widows are made eligible for postmasters throughout the country. And why not? They will be just as efficient and honest as the men, and it requires a woman no time at all to read a postal card.

CANADIAN ROTARY HIGHLY PRAISED

President Griffith and Other Salem Members Return from Convention

George Griffith and wife, and a few other Rotarians returned to Salem Thursday from the international district convention at Vancouver, B. C.

"It was the biggest thing ever," said George. "They scratched off every word in the dictionary except Hospitality, and they hired an orchestra on every block to play on that one string. They certainly did make it an international love feast. They had aptos for everyone of their 2500 visiting delegates, all the time they were there, and they shanghaied every duffer who even looked as if he wanted to walk. And they fed 'em—gosh, how they fed 'em! I'll never forget it."

"They sure don't need forts and gunboats and wire entanglements and treaties to keep such good fellows as the international Rotarians have proved to be, on both sides of the line. There isn't any line any more! It was the finest convention that anyone ever attended."

C. Miles and wife, who were part of the Salem delegation, went on up to Alaska, to be away for about a month. Some others of the locals stopped off at Seattle.

EAT LESS MEAT IF BACK HURTS

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers You

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly baskache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a table-spoon in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.—Adv.
