It soon became evident, however, that price upturns no greater than are witnessed almost daily would for the time being induce holders to let go of plenty of wheat to supply all immediate wants.

Holiday slowness of export demand coounted somewhat as a factor in easing the strain on the wheat market, particularly near the end of the day. Talk of curtailment of purchasing for domestic millers and of lack of inquiry for flour tended further to bring about declines at the last, A good sixed decrease in the United States visible supply was announced, but the effect on the market here was more or less offset by some additions to wheat in store here and by shipments to Chicago in prospect at Omaha and elsewhere.

Corn and oats were ruled by the action of wheat. Adverse weather conditions were of insufficient influence to uphold prices. Provisions averaged a little
