

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

CHAPTER 6

WHAT MADGE TRIED TO GUESS

Why is it, I wonder, that when we map out for ourselves an especially praiseworthy course of conduct we are not alert enough to avoid stumbling over the obstacles which seem to delight in presenting themselves in the path before our feet?

It is but a short time since I took mental stock of my marital life, and solemnly resolved that I would endeavor to bring all the skill and tact and consideration I had to my role of wife. And here, because my husband has commented caustically and disagreeably upon my flushing at his teasing reference to Maj. Grantland, I had lost my temper and made a retort which I knew would make him furiously angry.

His anger took a different course than his usual rages. It is one of Dicky's charms—or irritating qualities, I have never been able to decide which to consider it—that one never knows how he is going to react to any test of his self-control. This time he stopped abruptly, turned toward me, looked at me blackly, and ejaculated slowly:

"Well, I'll be d—d." There have been times when I would have retorted caustically that I had no doubt of his statement, but the pricklings of my conscience held me silent, and for a second or two I stood silently facing my husband's angry gaze. Then he turned abruptly, cut savagely at a warded bush with his stick, and said with a sneer in his voice:

"Have it your own way, dear heart. Perhaps you have discovered the real reason of my aversion to Majah Grantland."

His voice droned maddeningly as he mimicked my words with astonishing fidelity, but I pressed

Homemakers' Books Listed at Library

The busy mother and housekeeper who likes to "keep up" on all that is being said about the home, its care and efficient management will be interested to know just what books on home-making and child care are at the public library.

The business woman, the teacher, the professional worker, find that in order to do their best work they must read about what others have done in their line of work—it saves time which they might otherwise spend in finding the same thing out by experiment or experience.

The homemaker has an infinitely more important place in the everyday workaday world, why should she not do likewise?

A partial list of books carried with a brief statement of their particular field is as follows:

New Public Health. (Hills), a clear cut contrast between old superstition and modern science.
Clothing: choice, care, cost. (Woolman). Helps in the solution of the clothes problem.
Textiles and clothing. (McGowan & Waite) Points the way to intelligent and economical buying.

Clothing for women. (Baldt) Working directions for designing and constructing women's clothing.

Interior decorations for the small home. (Rolfe.) Art principles applied to home furnishing with moderate income.

Charm of fine manners. (Starr.) Delightful little books dealing with underlying principles.

The efficient life. (Gulick.) Commonplace habits which effect our efficiency.

Vegetable gardening. (Watts.) Principles and practices of vegetable gardening.

Manual of home making. (Van Rensselaer.) Valuable material on many phases of homemaking.

Marketing and household management. (Donham) The essentials of marketing and housework in concise outline form.

Business of the household. (Tabor) The household, its ideal, its management and legal status.

Feeding the family. (Rose.) Calorie values of foods and recipe and diet plans for grown-ups and children.

Boston Cooking School cook book. (Farmer.) Recipes and directions easily followed.

Care and feeding of children. (Holt.) Standard work on this subject.

Being well born. (Guyer.) Practical eugenics.

Prospective mother. (Simons.) Interesting presentation of essentials.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

The same kind of polish is not always suitable for all kinds of metals. Metal utensils are either solid or plated and some are lacquered to prevent darkening. Different methods of treatment are necessary to suit these different kinds of metals. If lacquer avoid polishing.

Silver. 1. Solid a. Put into a bright tin or aluminum pan and boil until oxide or tarnish disappears. The addition of one tablespoon of soda and one of salt will help this action.

b. Polish with whiting, or silicon and ammonia lard for a satin finish. Use a polishing cloth to rub with after dry.

2. Plated. Polish with whiting, silver polish, or wash carefully in sal-soda water.

Brass and copper. Remove the tarnish with vinegar and salt, working quickly and rinsing off thoroughly. Polish with paste made of rottenstone and linseed oil. Wash, rinse and polish off with a flannel cloth or chamol.

Nickel. Boil in vinegar or mixture of 2 ounces of powdered alum, 1 quart of vinegar. Polish with whiting and ammonia or lard and whiting.

Zinc. Clean thoroughly with kerosene.

Aluminum. 1. Boil in the vessel some water that has had a little vinegar added to it. This will prevent darkening due to action of alkalies.

2. Polish outside of vessel with whiting and alcohol or whiting and ammonia.

Enameled plumbing fixtures—Avoid coarse scouring materials as the glaze is injured and staining occurs more readily. Wash thoroughly with hot soap water, using kerosene to remove black marks. Clean occasionally with the following mixture and a brush, rinsing out thoroughly with hot water afterwards: 1-2 cup chloride of lime, 1 cup sal soda, 1-2 cup of whiting. Mix ingredients together well, powder fine and sprinkle little into sink or tub as needed. Avoid the use of lye for cleaning tubs and pipes.

This forms an insoluble soap plug and results in plumbing bills! Sal soda and plenty of hot water should be substituted for lye.

There is this feature about the Genoa conference that will appeal to everybody and that is, while any given nation is in a bad fix, it is no worse off than its companions around the table. That ought to create a community of interest.
