Grace Draper! The girl who had come so near to wrecking my marital happiness that I could not think of the slender margin whereby it had escaped destruction without a shudder. The girl who in fiendish revenge for her blocks from Capital grounds, paved street, car. $1300 cash, balance like failure to win Dicky's love away from me, had schemed his death the last minute maudlin repent- $1@1.50; selling price 1.40@1.75 ance of Harry Underwood. The girl whose influence upon Dicky even though I knew that he loath ed her, I yet psychically dreaded could not rid myself of the feeling that Grace Draper, alive and freed from prison bonds, was menace of evil in my life from > the consciousness of which would never be free again.

A Strange Message. My mind went swiftly, as drowning person's over the many incidents of my life in which the girl with her angel's face and her devil's soul had figured, lingered longest, with terrified fascination upon that summer day in the year following my marriage, when she lay, shamming delerium from her self-inflicted wounds, pretending to go over tender scenes with Dicky. Dr. Pettit had exposed her shamming, but the quiet maignance of her words and tone a: I left the room that day I never have been able to bury so deeply as to forget them altogether. "But you will never know, will you, Madgie, dear, just how much of what I said was false and how much true?" With the resolve to believe my husband utterly I had striven strenuously to put the rememman who had uttered them away from me. But there had been moments, as I had known there would be, at her bedside that day when her words had come back to me with intensified power to sear and scar. The sight of the woman whose figure resembled Grace Draper's had brought such a moment to me, and even my dread of the woman was dwarfed by the old gnawing doubt which was tearing at my heart.

I forced myself to composure however, as the taxi turned into Lillian's street, tried to appear as if nothing had happened when Betty, my friend's faithful o'c colored cook, opened the door.

"Come right in, Miss Madge." she exclaimed with a broad sm" of welcome. "I'se been watchir foh yoh, chile, foh dis las' halfhour.
