

WOMEN FAVOR GEORGE WHITE

Scout Young Auxiliary Endorses Candidacy for Governor of Oregon

Scout Young auxiliary of Portland, the wives and other women relatives of the largest camp of the United Spanish War Veterans in the United States, has gone on record in an unmistakable manner in the matter of the governorship. A resolution passed this week by the organization, numbers several hundred members, is here given as it was adopted:

"In the matter of women in politics, we feel we should take hold of politics as a business, honorably and respectfully, and take hold hard, and work for persons best qualified to fill the office to which they aspire and work for the highest and best, and.

White Platform Praised

"Whereas, we have carefully weighed the platform of George A. White, a candidate for governor, and feel he has promised an application of just plain business methods that will mean a great financial saving to the taxpayers from the present cost of our state government and a concentration of commissions now functioning in many departments; and

"Whereas, we feel he had no selfish interest to seek undue private benefits through governmental aid, we feel he has made no pledges or promises as a reward of party service and his administration will therefore secure to every citizen his just share of the safety and prosperity it holds in store for all; and.

Wide Sympathy Recognized

"Whereas, he has always shown a real fellowship, and a friendly and habitual interest in all that concerns the welfare of the common people and a prompt and sturdy defense of all that is right, and.

"Whereas, the glory acquired by the state of Oregon by being the first state in the union equipped to full military strength when war was declared on Germany was due to the firmness and thoroughness with which he did his duty; and

"Whereas, we feel Oregon is to be congratulated for having a man in the position of adjutant general who 'did not fall' his government; and

Business Qualifications Met

"Whereas, we feel he will administer the affairs of state as governor with the same firmness, the same dictates of pure reason and business sense as he has shown in the past, therefore be it

"Resolved that Scout Young auxiliary, United Spanish War Veterans, endorse our comrade, Adjutant General George A. White, as a candidate for governor of Oregon and pledge him our moral and political support by doing all within our power to promote his campaign. Be it further

"Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be mailed to the White-for-Governor headquarters and permission granted to use same in any way they see it to advertise and further promote his campaign; also a copy be furnished the press of the city."

AL G. BARNES WILD ANIMALS JEALOUS OF GIANT TUSKO, LARGEST ELEPHANT ON EARTH, FEATURED

Here he is—Tusko, emperor of animal creation, largest elephant on earth, and the Royal Bengal tigers, looking on, are reluctant snarling tribute, for since Tusko arrived from the Himalayas, the 1200 wild animals with Al G. Barnes' circus, coming to Salem today, realize that he is the spotlight favorite with the crowds, the feature of the big show features.

However, the educated tigers, lions, leopards, llamas, sea lions, seals, zebras, hippopotami, pumas, elephants, grizzlies, polar bears, baboons, chimpanzees, ostriches, kangaroos, yaks, emus, gnus, harte beestes and other jungle creatures claim that when it comes to acting, they have it all over the "last of the mammoths." But that's for the public to judge when the big show comes to town. Tusko is a foot taller and a ton and a half heavier than was Jumbo. The highest elephant car ever built, with deck lowered to give him clearance, transports the mightiest living creature. Tusko will be seen in the menagerie and in "Alice in Jungland," the beautiful opening lyrical pageant-spectacle, in which 1080 people, 550 horses and 1200 wild animals take part.

HOLDING A HUSBAND REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

CHAPTER 17 WHY DID LILLIAN LOOK AT MADGE PITINGLY?

Whatever "possessed me"—in my mother-in-law's phraseology—after Allen Drake's assertion that if my thoughts were worth but a half-ponny I must be thinking of him, I do not know. But I answered him in a manner so foreign to my usual treatment of him that I astonished both him and myself.

I suppose my nerves were partly to blame. They had been under extreme tension ever since the moment when the fancied resemblance to Grace Draper of a woman in the railroad taxi concourse had sent me cowering and panic-stricken into the shelter of the nearest taxi. Taut as a fiddle string, the smiling patronage of Allen Drake was the last bit of pressure necessary to snap them, and to make me irresponsible for what I said.

I felt a sudden impulse as wild and irrational as it was impossible to control, to play a game with this man of brilliant mentality and ridiculous vanity, make him believe, for the evening, at least, that I was "beginning to sit up and take notice." Then, I promised myself grimly, I would choose a moment to correct his impression of me when it would stab his vanity most.

So at his audacious speech I dropped my eyes demurely and said in as naive fashion as I could manage:

"And if I confess the crime, what will the lord of the feast do? Order me to execution?"

An Idle Moment.

I raised my eyes swiftly, suddenly, as I spoke the last word, looked with simulated shy mischief at him for a second, then dropped them. But I had seen astonishment flash into his, and I was content.

I heard a swift little intake of his breath, and instinctively knew that he had meant me to hear it and to fancy that he was emotionally impressed by my little speech. My gorge rose at this fresh proof of his low opinion of my mentality. One of the most perfectly poised men in the world, the absolute master of his facial expression and actions, he meant me to believe that he was sighing like a sentimental schoolgirl. I clenched my hands involuntarily. The next second I felt a quick pressure of the one which rested on Mr. Drake's arm.

"Suppose I 'make the punishment fit the crime,'" he quoted softly.

To my intense relief we reached the table as he spoke, and he was forced to release both my hand and my attention in order to draw back Lillian's chair. I swiftly slipped into my own without his assistance, secretly rejoicing at the chagrin that flashed for the briefest of instants into his eyes. I knew that in any contest of wits with a man he would have kept his eyes absolutely expressionless, but he evidently did not credit me with much power of observation, so betrayed his disappointment at my elusion of him.

Lillian's Order.

Lillian learned forward in her seat.

"Better not dally with that clam cocktail too long, my children," she said with her eyes on me. "Betty is frothing at the mouth now behind the kitchen door for fear her pot soup won't be served at precisely the correct temperature, which, according to her, is just below the boiling point."

"Betty, come out of the kitchen," parodied Mr. Drake smilingly, but I noticed that he kept his voice to a subdued murmur, and that he discussed his clam cocktail with acceleration. Lillian's old friends not only have a remarkably high regard for Betty's dinners, but a wholesome awe of her tantrums, for they know by experience that to provoke one of the latter may cause a swift loss of the former.

As for me, I could only make a pretense of eating the relish set before me. Something in Lillian's glance as she bent it upon me had startled me. It sent flying to the four winds all thought of matching wits against Allen Drake, and brought back to my mind all the fears and doubts which had beset me.

For it was pity, nothing else, that looked out from her eyes. Pity quickly veiled, it is true, but unmistakable nevertheless. I surmised, knowing her so well, that she had something to tell me, and that she did not intend to reveal it until after dinner. That it was urgent, however, I guessed also from her adjuration not "to dally." I was sure that the infinitive applied to something else beside the clam cocktail.

MAKE OREGON SAFE for the REPUBLICAN PARTY

RALPH E. WILLIAMS
COMMITTEEMAN

The Only Westerner Ever Elected Vice-Chairman of the Republican National Committee

KEEP THE WEST IN POWER

The Republican National Committee consists of one member from each state in the Union and is the political organization of the party. In June, 1921, at the Committee's first meeting after the inauguration of President Warren G. Harding, every state cast its vote for Ralph E. Williams of Oregon for vice-chairman of the Committee, recognizing by their unanimous vote his fitness and ability as a leader to fill this responsible position.

A vote for Ralph E. Williams for Republican National Committeeman will confirm the action of the forty-eight states in electing him vice-chairman of the Republican National Committee, a position never before held by a Western man.

Ralph E. Williams of Oregon, as vice-chairman of the Republican National Committee, is directly in line to become National chairman, the highest position attainable in the Republican organization.

A National Committeeman on the National Committee does not make or execute the laws, but carries out the policies and platform of the party adopted by the delegates at each previous National Convention.

Mr. Williams is senior member of the National Committee. Seniority in this committee gives one the same power as seniority in the U. S. Senate.
