"The Syndic of the Cloth Workers' Guild" is one of the best as well as one of the best known of Rembrandt's paintings. The picture brings in nothing but portraits but so connected are they that one sees them at a glance. The Syndics or heads of the Guild are doing nothing more than what would take them around a table to listen to the reading of accounts. They almost speak and are not posed—they are there—and have as it were been surprised by some one opening the door. As a mere painting it is as wonderful as the more beautiful canvases.

Rembrandt Van Rijn who lived from 1606 to 1669, was of the Dutch School of Painters, and one of the foremost artists of the world—one of the few great original men who stand alone—a dreamer and the master of many realities.

Miss Lucille Saunders, formerly telegraph editor of the Statesman, who has been in South America for the last year, has recently been appointed to a position with the United Press in Washington, D. C., according to word received by Portland friends. She has been with the United Press in Buenos Aires. She was a member of the Oregonian staff before leaving for South America.

Miss Fern Hobbs, secretary to Oswald West as governor, is returning from her work in Paris with the Y.M.C.A., and will arrive in Portland July 1. Miss Hobbs was among the large number of Americans attending the Passion Play in Oberammergau, May 7. She is just now travelling in Europe, having severed her relations with the Paris Y.M.C.A., April 24, because of the scattering of American soldiers.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adole, Garrison's New Phase of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

THE WAY BESS DEAN "DISCLOSED HER HAND."

As I saw Bess Dean I wondered at my own stupidity in not recognizing her in Katie's urrade: "She looked at me dis vray out of her eyes and laugh to herself like I vos one of dose monkeys up in zoo." This trick of apparently smiling to herself, although she continues it to her eyes and never lets it appear on her lips, is Bess Dean's most effective weapon with refractory pupils. She uses it mercilessly, not only upon the children in her care, but upon any one else who happens to amuse her, or whom she desires to make uncomfortable.

stately when she chooses—she is the last person whom one would imagine in a school room. But she is marvellously effective there, and has the reputation of turning out higher percentages on examinations than any one else in the school. She has perfect discipline, and her pupils certainly know intelligently the particular part of the curriculum which is her lot. But the children hate her as cordially as she dislikes them. I am afraid that in character building or in giving the children a love for reading or study—which, after all, are the most necessary results of teaching—Bess Dean fails dismally.

A Flippant Greeting.

That she considered me fairly "interesting" I had known ever since I met her. That she had considered Dickie still more so, I had also realized rather forcibly upon one or two occasions. The knowledge had not augmented my rather slender liking for the girl, and several other revelations of the absolute selfishness and cold indifference toward human relations which her careless, good-natured manner concealed, had made me almost actively dislike her.

I fancy she reciprocates my feeling, at any rate we have seen each other but once or twice since I finished my year as her colleague in the Bayview school. Her call upon me was a surprise, although I suspected it was simply a careless wish to please Miss Holcombe. Alice, for all her cynicism, is staunch in her friendships, and she has always liked Miss Dean sincerely. I think she has unconsciously brought out and emphasized the best points in the other woman's character. And I am sure that Bess Dean gives to the older woman the very best friendship and liking of which her cold nature is capable.

"Her greeting to me was characteristic, as flippant as if we had seen each other but a few hours instead of months before.

"Well! How's the her-oh-oh?" she drawled. "Still vindicating innocence and bringing long lost souls together? From the looks of you it doesn't pay, dearie. Have you been ill?"

"I Do Hope—"

Alice's face crimsoned, and with a supreme effort I kept myself from frowning. Whether her malice had been calculated or careless it had certainly been effective. She had succeeded in making me feel supremely ridiculous, and implanted a doubt as to whether I did look as fagged as she had implied. That she knew a great deal more than I wished of the inside story of the Stockbridge case I realized by Alice Holcombe's embarrassed flush.

but I was reassured by the memory of Miss Holcombe's declaration months before that "Bess Dean is as safe as a church."

"Never felt better in my life," I returned shortly. "And you? But you don't need to tell me. You are looking uncommonly well."

I spoke only the truth, although I should not have made a disparaging comment if she had looked ever so bad. My little mother made that one of the principles of my earliest training.

"No gentleman, no one who catty in her remarks," she used to say when I was a child. But I remember once when I was older and she repeated the words, she half-closed her eyes and added softly, "Unless she is goaded beyond her endurance. Sometimes, child, is the only thing one can do. But use it rarely, perhaps a half-dozen times in your life."

I have followed her advice, and have used up perhaps two of the half-dozen times she allotted me. But I did not consider Bess Dean of enough importance to warrant the wasting of a shaft of satire.

DONEY SPEAKS AT LUNCHEON

Invitation to Attend Convocation at State College Is Accepted

A report was given at the Commercial club luncheon Monday of the club delegation to the O.A.C. Junior class day program at Corvallis last Saturday. Rev. Martin Fereshtetan and Carle Abrams each told something of the visit. A motion to accept a further invitation to the convocation services at Corvallis, May 24, was accepted, and the club expects to send 50 cars if possible.

Dr. Carl Gregg Doney, president of Willamette, the principal speaker of the day, strongly favored going to Corvallis and to all the big schools of the valley to get better acquainted with the great education projects of the state.

Survey Reported On Following a carefully prepared address on the growth of educational ideas, Dr. Doney told of the report recently made by the Inspector for the United States government, in his survey of Willamette university in Salem.

"You have a wonderfully strong science department here, for a classical college," he said, after going over the course of study and seeing the work of the institution. He found the same strength in other departments also, marking a strongly balanced course.

All problems are judgmental," said the speaker. "One needs history and science, and economics, and literature, to be prepared fully for almost any really work while line of work. Willamette university stands for this balanced preparation."

Financial Worth Great The speaker showed that the university has about 100 actual resident Salem students. The others come here mainly or altogether for their college work. He estimated that the school means from $250,000 to $300,000 a year of money brought to Salem for this purpose alone.

But it is not so much the money as a high standard that Willamette has contributed," he said. "Our property and our American institutions are not safe without the leaven which such an education contributes."

Invitation Extended The speaker urged the Commercial club to include the university in its list of Salem advantages, to put it in the club literature, and to consider the university as a personal asset for every man.

Joseph Baumgartner was chairman for the day. A. N. Mooros will serve as chairman next Monday.

Automatic Refrigerator

Ice cannot melt without giving proper refrigeration in an AUTOMATIC

The Automatic Put to a Test

Yesterday morning two newspapermen sealed in an Automatic Refrigerator the following articles: Milk, butter, chocolates, sliced oranges, Limburger cheese, sliced onions, green onions, lettuce, salt herring, steak, cigars, cigarettes and matches.

Saturday afternoon the refrigerator will be opened, and after 102 hours the food will be as fresh as when first put in. Be on hand on Saturday at the opening and taste the milk, which will be as sweet and free from taint as when received from the creamery.

Free Ice

We have made arrangements with the Salem Ice Company to supply every AUTOMATIC Refrigerator sold during this special showing with ice absolutely free of charge, for one week. As it is not likely this generous offer will be repeated we would advise getting your refrigerator during this week.
