question of taking her to dinner and the theater I am not sure that I wouldn't jump at the chance, but as a model, that girl hasn't the first qualification. Her lines aren't right, nor her hands nor feet—and she'd never learn how to pose—she's taught school to long, been too much absolute boss—she might try to make her muscles obey, but she couldn't, she isn't plastic enough. Aside from those two qualifications, either of which is absolutely essential for a model, she's perfectly all right."

Dicky's voice was heavy with sarcasm. I knew he meant to be perfectly crushing, and I tried to keep my secret joy out of my face and to look properly impressed.

"I'm awfully sorry, Dicky," I said meekly. "But really I didn't mean to annoy you. It all started as the merest jest. I admired her costume immensely and told her so. She laughingly said she would like to have Friend Husband's approval, and I told her that you would probably want to put her on a cover."

"And then she made an altitude record, of course," my husband replied with a touch of arrogant commonplace in his voice which I resented, but which I knew was justified by his experience. "Wish I had a five-spot for every girl who has asked to go on one of my magazine covers. We'd circle the world in luxury the rest of our days, old girl."

Dicky Reminiscences.

The words were a reminder of the thing which sets Dicky apart from most husbands, save those who are fellow-artists, musicians or actors, and makes unusually difficult the wifely task of managing or holding him—the fact that countless silly women, of all degrees of pulchritude and person, beseege him by letter and personal interview for the chance to be a part of the "girl" illustrations which are fast bringing him to the top of his profession.

My common sense tells me to share Rory O'Moore's philosophy that "there is safety in numbers." It reminds me that Dicky is far less apt to fall a victim to the charms of some pretty girl than would a man who rarely saw one, but when did a young woman ever have common sense where the affections of her husband are concerned. She may pretend to have, may conceal her jealousy so admirably that no one ever guesses it, but it is deep in her being, a very part of her, ready to spring into flame at the striking of a match. It takes the wife's decision irrevocably in his mind to irritate him. "Miss Dean is extremely pretty, and her costume is certainly—"

"Granted, all of that!" Dicky retorted testily. "If it were a

CHAPTER 23

THE WAY DICKY BROUGHT UP "AN UNPLEASANT SUBJECT"

Bess Dean's parting words troubled me not at all. I felt that I had come out victor in a situation which might have bred unpleasantness for me. Even the frown to which Dicky treated me as soon as the door closed after our visitors failed to disturb me in the least. In fact, it rather pleased me, for it showed that his jealous dignity of his own opinions which I had jostled meant far more to him than the undeniable attractions of Miss Dean in her new spring outfit.

"For the love of Lulu, Madge!" he exploded as he turned back to me after bowing Miss Dean and Miss Holcombe out with the royal courtesy which he knows so well how to use. "What set you off on that tangent of urging me to have that girl pose for an illustration? I wish you'd attend to your own affairs for a change and not try to run mine. You embarrassed me horribly."

A Diplomatic Apology.

"But I don't see why, Dicky," I protested, careful, however, to keep my voice very meek and conciliatory. "I only wished to find his decision irrevocably in his mind to irritate him. "Miss Dean is extremely pretty, and her costume is certainly—"

"Granted, all of that!" Dicky retorted testily. "If it were a Dicky stretched himself in a lounging chair, and took out a cigar—he knows that I love to have him smoke when he's talking to me, and he had talked himself into a good humor—"there isn't one girl in a thousand, better say a million, who has all the qualifications of a perfect model. The only absolutely perfect one I ever knew—begging your pardon, my dear, for bringing up an unpleasant subject—was the Drape. Gad! that girl had everything down to the last bone of her little finger, and vitality! She could keep a pose longer than anybody I ever saw."

"I've got a book on how that I'm tempted to turn back, simply because I can't find anybody to fit the text. If dear Gracie weren't 'deep in a dungeon cell' I believe I'd send for her, even if I had to throw a cord of police around the studio to keep her from starting a revolution if she happened to think of it."

Gillingham—Do you believe in heredity?

Wagner—Of course I do! Why, I've got one of the brightest boys you ever saw.

Automatic Refrigerator

Ice cannot melt without giving proper refrigeration in an AUTOMATIC

Tuesday morning May 16, two newspapermen sealed in an Automatic Refrigerator the following articles:

Milk, Butter, Chocolates, Limberger Cheese, Green Onions, Smoked Salmon, Beefsteak, Weiners, Cigars, Cigarettes

Yesterday at 5 p. m. the seal was broken and the refrigerator opened after 102 hours—Every Article was as Fresh and Sweet as it was when Placed in the Refrigerator. No taint or odor appeared in the food.

The above facts offer conclusive proof that AUTOMATIC leads the field.

Come in and be convinced.

50 Pounds of ice was placed in the Refrigerator Tuesday Morning. 11½ pounds remained when it was opened Saturday at 5 p. m. after 102 hours of refrigeration.
