MEMORIAL day was featured by numerous motor trips of Salem families into the country and to nearby towns for visits with friends and relatives. Many university students spent the day at their homes or with friends and returned last night for class work.

This is the last week of college work at Oregon Agricultural college and next week will see the close of the school year at Willamette University of Oregon closes next and the young folks of the city will be home for the three months vacation period.

Vacation trips to the beaches and the mountains are being arranged by numerous Salem families especially since the sudden warm weather during the last few days. Society is interested this week in the coming commencement at the different colleges and universities and the delightful garden and motor parties which are arranged to entertain the guests.

The close of school brings with it the usual number of farewell parties and annual picnic parties. The three high school classes will have their group picnics while the different clubs and societies will also tie themselves to the woods and streams for pleasure.

The T. A. club of the senior high school picnicked Monday night at the Adolph farm across the river. More than 60 members and friends of the club attended. Miss Beryl Holt, advisor for the group and Miss Olo Clark accompanied the party. Following the supper a general happy time was enjoyed around the bonfire.

The K. O. club will go to Silver Creek Falls, 30 miles from Salem next Saturday, June 3. Twenty-two couples will go over in cars and stay all day. Herman Clark is faculty advisor for the club and will be one of the chaperones. The committee in charge of the picnic is composed of Arthur Montgomery, Kenneth Perry and Ralph Emmons.

The senior class will go to Silver Creek Falls June 6. It is probable they will make the trip in trucks and spend the day there. Miss Hazel Brown is class advisor and will be one of the chaperones. The juniors will picnic on June 7 and the sophomores on June 9. Miss Ada Ross is the junior class advisor.

The Cecilia music club will go out for their annual frolic June 5. Faculty advisors for the group are Miss Lena Belle Tartar and Mrs. W. Denton. The K. C. club picnicked yesterday near Salem.

The holiday brought many students home for a few days vacation. Among those visiting in Salem for Memorial day and the week-end were Miss Margaret Goodin, Miss Gretchen Brown, Miss Helen Rose, Miss Leta Waters.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Watson were Memorial day guests at the home of Dr. and Mrs. H. H. Olinger.

The Social Circle of the Central Congregational church will meet at the church Wednesday afternoon. The hostesses will be Mrs. G. S. Erickson and Mrs. D. H. Craven. All women of the church are being invited to attend.

Col. and Mrs. George A. White returned Sunday from Corvallis where they attended a military dance and were guests at dinner.

Mrs. Josephine Childers has as her guests her two grandsons, John and Claude Conders of Heppner.

Mrs. W. F. Eulery and her daughters, Miss Jessie Eulery and Miss Gladys Eulery of Moro, are guests of Mrs. Eulery's mother, Mrs. B. W. Smith. They will be here for two weeks.

CHAPTER 36

THE WAY MADGE MADE HER FATHER'S EYES SHINE.

Marion received me joyously, and I tried to forget in the warm, whimsical welcome of my friend's small daughter the menace to my happiness which Lillian and my father were discussing downstairs. But evidently I failed, for after the child had given me my tea she came over to me, and with an accent and manner that reminded me forcibly of her mother, said softly:

"I'm afraid your head hurts. Auntie Madge. Wouldn't you like to lie down and have me bathe and rub it?" I do mother's often. She says I'm better than a masseuse!

"A masseuse?" I suggested, smiling involuntarily at the child's pretty petulance.

"That's it!" she said with a ludicrously relieved air. "Don't you want to see what a good one I am?"

"I think I do, Marion." I smiled at her with real gratitude and relief, for I knew instinctively that Lillian's daughter couldn't be awkward—she is too like her mother. And the prospect of the ministrations with its necessary accompaniment of silence—was undeniably attractive.

Tranquility Restored.

I wasn't disappointed. The little girl—I thought as I watched her how pathetically soon she would be a big girl, a young woman, leaving childish joys and responsibility behind, and facing, in her turn, the stern realities of life—arranged the pillows upon the wonderfully comfortable couch where I had often rested before. And when, with pretty fussing, she had established me on it, she brought towels and a basin of cool water and bathed and rubbed my head until by the time my father and Lillian came up from the living room my nerves were tranquilized to a degree I had not dreamed possible.

The faces of both were non-committal, and they looked sharply at Marion and me as they entered. I realized two things—that neither intended to tell me the real truth concerning Grace Draper's movements and that both were worried over my possible restiveness under such a decision.

But little Marion's ministrations had given me more than rest for my nerves. They had enabled me quietly to reflect upon the situation which confronted me, to realize, as I had not done before, how powerless I would be against Grace Draper's machinations if it were not for the bulwark which the love and skill and knowledge of my father and Lillian Underwood had raised about me.

"An Engagement."

Surely, I told myself scathingly, the least I could do in return for such royal protection was to submit unquestioningly to any course of conduct they thought best, and to keep from expressing by so much as the quiver of an eyelash any curiosity concerning their mode of procedure, or even against the activities of the girl against whom they were guarding me.

I put my hand upon the childish ones smoothing my hair, drew them down and myself to a sitting posture.

"I didn't know you provided professional massages with tea, Lillian," I said with an assumption of saucy lightness. "I am very grateful to you, indeed, for banishing me up here. Marion has been the most wonderful little nurse in the world. My headache is gone, my nerves are tranquil, and I feel generally at peace with the world. Please do it again."

I looked steadily, meaningly, at her as I uttered the last sentence, and knew by the answering flash in her eyes that she had comprehended my meaning and was immeasurably relieved and gladdened by my attitude.

But her verbal answer characteristically ignored anything beneath the surface of my little speech.

"Don't worry, I shall whenever I don't want you around," she retorted. "And now of course, you're going to stay for dinner with me."

I looked at my wrist watch. "This is once when I am going to refuse you, Lillian," I said quietly. "Father and I have an engagement for this evening which I was afraid we would have to postpone, but if we call a taxi directly, we shall have time to snatch a bite at the station and ample time to keep it."

"You could snatch a bite here," Lillian began with indignant hospitality, but I interrupted her ruthlessly.

"And make an enemy of Betty for life," I retorted. "You know her opinion of people who hurry through her dinners. No, my dear, I must have my way in this."

She looked at me keenly, then turned toward the telephone. "Needs must, I suppose," she quoted over her shoulder petulantly.

But my father's eyes were shining.
