

Largent Funeral Held from Silverton Church

SILVERTON, Ore., June 15.—(Special to The Statesman)—Mrs. Jasper Largent died at her home on North Water street Saturday night after a short illness. Funeral services were held from the Christian church Tuesday afternoon.

Mrs. Largent leaves three daughters and her husband. The oldest daughter is Mrs. Harrison Cosho of Boise, Idaho, who is a member of the 1921 graduating class from the University of Oregon. The two remaining daughters are Miss Mary and Miss Edna Largent, the former of whom was graduated from the university with this year's class while the younger of the two is a junior there. All of the girls are members of the Zeta and Epsilon sororities.

HIGH SCHOOL HAS PROBLEM

Question of Accommodating Attendance Next Year Looms Formidable

Indications point to a probable registration of 800 in the high school next year at the beginning of the fall term. In February this number will likely be increased to over 900, according to predictions of school officials.

How this number of students is to be accommodated looms as a formidable barrier to successful operation next year. With the opening of the machine room and the athletic training room, as class rooms next fall all of the possibilities for more space will have been exhausted.

More Room Imperative
The building of more recitation rooms seems imperative, although everything will be done to stave off that demand.

At the present time 730 students have actually enrolled for the fall term. Judging from past records, school officials estimate that at least 50 more enter from outside schools and late registrations. The incoming class from the junior high numbers 224, whereas it was less than 200 last fall.

September Enrollment Big

Predictions that more space will be needed are easily formulated from comparative statistics, say those in charge. At the beginning of the 1921 term, there was an enrollment of but 690 while more than 800 will enter in September of this year. The February class of next year numbers over 100, as compared with 82 this year. In 1921 the school graduated 183, tonight it will graduate 180, and by next year more than 200 must receive diplomas.

Principal Comments

Belief that it would be possible to begin the fall term next year by carefully conserving space, without drastic alteration, was expressed yesterday by Principal J. C. Nelson. The trouble will come he says, when the February class swells the enrollment to over 900.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

CHAPTER 49

HOW MOTHER GRAHAM SWIFTLY CHANGED HER ATTITUDE.

I could not help a quick, furtive glance at my mother-in-law when Dicky so nonchalantly announced his responsibility for Maj. Grantland's idea of matching the bouquets he was providing for the women of the wedding party to samples of their gowns. I knew better than to let her see me looking at her, nor did I care to witness her discomfiture. She had been so didactic in her disapproval of both the major and his scheme that at Dicky's announcement her dignity collapsed as if it had been a child's inflated balloon pricked with a pin.

But if any one fancied that her spirit remained crushed for more than a few seconds that person is not familiar with the resilience of Dicky's doughy parent. Her tone was actually triumphant as she addressed me.

"I told you Grantland never would have thought of that all by himself," she said, and her air subtly conveyed the thought that she really approved the idea, but doubted the young officer's originality in the matter.

"I know you did, mother," I said demurely. I saw Dicky glance at me quickly, shrewdly, caught a twinkle in his eye, and knew by an intonation with which he was familiar I had succeeded in giving him an inkling of the true state of affairs.

"I'll warrant you did, mother," he laughed, then parried her possible answer by turning to me.

Dicky is Complacent.

"Grantland is rather a novice when it comes to the eternal feminine, and what will please her," he said complacently. "But he's a good fellow if he is rather a stick. So I didn't register any kick when Alf told me that Grantland wanted to provide the wedding bouquets, all except Lella's; of course. Alf is driving his florist crazy trying to get just the kind and shade of blossoms he wants for her to carry. You'd think he was worth a billion at least instead of being a more or less struggling art editor. But then he probably won't get married again for two or three years at least, so I guess it won't break him."

I was surprised to find myself tingling with indignation at Dicky's contemptuous reference to the young officer with whom I had shared such deadly perils.

"Rather a stick, indeed!" I thought hotly, with the remembrances of the time always fresh in my memory. My resentment almost led me into the petty retaliation of telling my husband that Alfred in all probability would not be worrying about the kind of flowers which would suit Lella after a year or two of marriage, but I prudently choked back the caustic words.

"Of course, it was really up to me as best man to get the bouquets," Dicky went on, "but I knew that Grantland was a bit hipped about not having that place himself, and I fell for this other scheme as soon as Alf told me about it. And Grantland was really very decent, asked my permission and advice, and all that sort of thing."

Madge on Guard.

Again I felt indignation surging to my lips, and again I restrained it. Dicky consciously or unconsciously, was so loftily superior in his attitude toward Maj. Grantland that I could not help feeling resentful. The young officer has done me too many signal services for me to listen undisturbed to slighting references to him.

But I kept my lips tightly closed and was glad that Dicky's next words were such that I could answer without irritation, perfunctorily.

"I suppose you both gave Mrs. Durkee the samples," he asked idly.

For a brief second or two I saw my mother-in-law nonplussed. She had refused Mrs. Durkee's request so decidedly and had been so insistent that I, too, should deny the young officer's wish, that I saw even her resourceful brain was not ready with an answer. I made haste to reply with a nonchalance that I was far from feeling.

"Neither mother nor I fancied the idea very much at first," I said, "and, besides, we could not find pieces of our gowns readily. But Mrs. Durkee said that she would tell Maj. Grantland we were hunting for them, and would send him over when he called for the sample of hers this morning."

TO DARKEN HAIR APPLY SAGE TEA

Look Young! Bring Back Its Natural Color, Gloss and Attractiveness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store, all ready for use. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and after another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.—Adv.
