EXTERMINATOR WINNING THE BROOKLYN HANDICAP.

Every year there is a new turf idol—a champion all racegoers love. But never was there a more popular thoroughbred than Willis Kilmer's grand old cup horse Exterminator. This seven-year-old unsexed son of McGee and Fair Express won the Brooklyn Handicap at the opening of the Aqueduct meeting from Harry F. Sinclair's great four-year-old Grey Lag by a head, after one of the most sensational finishes since Dry Monopole won its inaugural in 1887 by an inch or two. The photo was taken just as the two crossed the wire.

His Shoulders Drooped and His Step Faltered, but He Wasn't a Pauper; Knew How to Get Coin

He shuffled along with faltering step, his shoulders drooping and his brows knitted as though in deep and painful meditation. The reporter halted and took a second look at the delapidated old man, for like most news "hounds" the reporter was of a sympathetic nature and gloried in pondering over the trials and tribulations of his fellow being. The old man passed, only to reappear shortly with his coat bulging at the sides. The reporter sighed. No doubt the one of the drooping shoulders and bulging coat had been pilfering stray morsels of food, the new "hound" reasoned, for he had read of such things in fiction. He reached for a coin, but the drooping shoulders had disappeared around a corner. Bent on lending a helping hand the reporter followed. His ears caught the sound of clinking coins. He looked around the corner. Drooping shoulders reached beneath his bulging coat. A brown bottle came forth and passed from the old man's hands to those of another. The clinking coins dropped into the pocket of the one with the faltering step and the old man shuffled on his way. The would-be camaritan heaved a sigh. "You can't pick a poor man from a bootlegger these days," he confessed to himself and resumed his own problems of life.
