age, irresistible desire to shake him from his icy loftiness, and yielded to it swiftly. "Maj. Grantland has seen to everything. He telephoned me a moment ago, fearing from my absence at the station and the talk of an accident that it was I who was hurt, and he and Hastings have started out here in the car to fetch me to the station. I shall be there in plenty of time. I am sure."

Sick at Heart.

"What the devil!"

The exclamation was quick, sharp, interrogative. The next minute the receiver had slammed down, but not before I had heard my husband say hoarsely, savagely:

"I hope you both break your d--d necks."

I turned away, from the telephone sick at heart and trembling as with an ague. Dicky had been furiously angry with me many times before, but I had never known him to utter words such as I had just heard. I knew of the strenuously concealed streak of superstition in his nature, the inheritance of a remote Celtic strain in his blood, and knew that he must have been furious indeed to say the thing he had. There would be with him the lurking fear that the words might come true.

Jim is Anxious.

"Suppose he didn't really care if they did?"

I seemed to hear the words almost as if they had been spoken close to my ear, and knew that my particular little leering devil, who used to paint cynical thoughts in my brain, and whose appearances have grown less and less frequent as the years have mellowed my emotions, was at his work again. I suppose every person "less stolid than the ox" possesses such an appendage, more or less real to them. Mine has always been most vivid. There are times when I almost believe in his existence.

I was in a ripe mood to listen to his mockery. The slips Dicky had made in speaking of Edith Fairfax, his solicitude for her comfort, his indifference as to mine, had prepared the soil of my mind for the noxious seed which he had just planted there. For a few seconds, which seemed an eternity, I said over and over again to myself the words which had flashed into my brain—my hands over my eyes, for I felt stricken, covering, as if I could not bear the light.

"Is there anything the matter, Mrs. Graham? Has anything happened?"

Jim's anxious voice brought me to myself. I dropped my hands quickly and assumed a matter-of-fact air, which I devoutly hoped would deceive the honest chap.

"Oh, no, Jim! Nothing at all. But I think there is something reckless disregard of either Dicky's opinions or his possible actions.

Little Tommy was absorbed in a picture of Elijah going to heaven in the chariot of fire. Pointing to the halo about the prophet's head, he finally exclaimed: "See, father, he's carrying an extra pair of wings."

The effort to appear calm helped me more than anything else to regain my poise. By the time for Maj. Grantland's arrival I had run the gamut of fear, sorrow, anger—and all these emotions had crystallized into a cold.

CHAPTER 61

WHAT HAPPENED OVER THE TELEPHONE.

My little premonition was justified. It was Dicky at the telephone. But there was in his voice none of the anxiety which Maj. Grantland had displayed. Instead, there was a stiffer formality than I had ever known him to use in speaking to the most casual acquaintance. Of course, I knew that it masked the cold anger which had been his ever since I had mimicked his reference to Edith Fairfax, and guessed shrewdly that he would not have called me up at all if he could have managed the omission with common decency.

"How is Katie?" he asked in so perfunctory a manner that I made my reply laconic.

"Very comfortable, thank you."

"You will be able to leave her then?"

"Yes."

"Can you make the train?"

"I think so."

"Is there anything I can do?"

His tone was so remotely chilling by this time that I imagined I felt the telephone wires congealing.

"No, thank you." I felt a sav-

LADIES! DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

Use Grandma's Sage Tea and Sulphur Recipe and Nobody Will Know

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied, with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is messy and out of date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "W. A. Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two it becomes beautifully dark and glossy. —Adv.
