HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

CHAPTER NO. 70

WHAT RITA BROWN SUGGESTED

There was no indication in Maj. Grantland's manner that he had recognized us. I knew that his natural delicacy would make him pretend this, fearing that Rita Brown and I would be embarrassed by our kimonos and bonnet caps. Therefore, as his back disappeared around the corner of the car corridor I was horribly annoyed to hear an audible amused snicker from the woman peering over my shoulder.

"With a hasty 'thank you' to the porter I dismissed him and closed the door. Rita Brown was gazing at me with a malicious little smile.

"So-o," she drawled. "The dear Majah was planning to see his 'country's capital.' Isn't it terrible that the 'best laid plans gang aft so agley'?"

Miss Brown Is Hungry.

I have never fought a harder battle in my life than the one of the next few seconds, in which I vanquished the almost irresistible desire to box Rita Brown's ears soundly and turn her out of the drawing-room which my father had secured for me, but a share in which I had offered her. That I was able immediately afterward to school my voice to a lightness of raillery equalling her own, is a matter of gratified pride to me.

"You've left out the tale and laughed. 'Surely, you don't mean to 'call me outen my name.'"

"I'm not so sure that 'mouse' shouldn't be your middle name, at least," she retorted, with a meaning, malicious little smile which irritated me almost beyond endurance. "But let's can all such endearments! There's just one question before this house at present. When and where do we eat? I'm nearly starved."

"That question is out the top of the gods who preside over this engine of ours," I said carelessly, slipping out of my kimono and preparing to dress.

I would have given much to have returned to the couch for another nap, but I had no idea what Rita Brown might take it into her head to do, and I wished to be dressed and ready for any emergency. It was in the same spirit one prepares for execution that I drew on my shoes. That she was fully capable, for instance, of summoning the man of our party to the drawing-room and making them a committee of the whole to secure breakfast for her I knew. I knew also that the fact we were both attired in negligee wouldn't deter her for an instant.

"Do you mean to say that you people came off without bringing any lunch for an emergency like this?" This was the amazing question or rather demand which she flung at me, her face expressing astonished resentment.

Half in Fun.

"We brought things for the baby, of course," I returned coldly. "his certified brand of milk in thermos bottles, a tiny emergency stove for heating it, and some oranges for the juice he takes every day. But except for some fruit and crackers which my mother-in-law always takes with her, we have no lunch with us."

"No possibility of grandmaw or baby having an extra orange or cracker or bit of milk is there?" she said with jocular insinuation which I knew held more than a little reality. Indeed, if she had been given unsuspected access to the supplies of either the baby or my frail mother-in-law I was sure that she would unhesitatingly have satisfied her own hunger from their portion.

"Not the slightest chance in the world," I answered promptly. "My mother-in-law is the guardian of the larder, and as she is always foreseeing the slow starvation of her grandson because of some food emergency, you may be very sure it would be a hopeless task to forage in that direction."

"She'll double the guards when she realizes the slowness of this train," she commented with a flippancy that I guessed was meant to conceal from me the fact that she had been in earnest when she asked about the baby's supplies. "My word! If I had guessed you would be so short sighted I would have brought some lunch along myself. Do you suppose that the Durkees brought any?"

"I'm afraid you'll have to ask Mrs. Durkee that question," I replied, trying to keep out of my voice the disgust I felt at her sordid pettiness.

"I'll just do that little thing!" she retorted. "By the time I get dressed they'll be awake, and I'll run over to the next car."

She disappeared into the wash room, and when she emerged her natural pallor had been replaced by a brilliant, and, I had to admit, most skillfully applied color. She dressed carefully, and when she had finished looked at me with mocking deference.

"Would you object very much if I put on this wonderful cloak?" she asked, picking up the wrap Maj. Grantland had brought for my long drive. "The aisles are apt to be draughty."

(To be continued.)

Former Vice-President Marshall is making a tour of Europe. And he is having a fine time. After all is said and done, it must be admitted that Thomas Riley is an amoozin' cusa.

Mrs. Peter Oleson, the Democrat candidate for the Senate in Minnesota, is distributing boxes of candy among the voters. Her campaign expense bill is likely to be a fright and place the Newberry figures in the discard.

SULPHUR CLEARS A PIMPLY SKIN

Apply Sulphur as Told When Your Skin Breaks Out

Any breaking out of the skin on face, neck, arms or body is overcome quickest by applying Mentho-Sulphur. The pimples seem to dry right up and go away, declares a noted skin specialist.

Nothing has ever been found to take the place of sulphur as a pimple remover. It is harmless and inexpensive. Just ask any druggist for a small jar of Rowles Mentho-Sulphur and use it like cold cream.—Adv.
