

Sherbet and Ices Popular Summer Dishes

One of the most delicate of sherbet varieties is Apricot and Grapefruit sherbet. Boil together 1 1/2 cups of sugar and one cup of water. Cool. Extract 1 1/2 cups of grape juice from fresh grapefruit and add one cup of washed, cooked apricots and one-half tablespoonful of lemon juice. Mix with the cold sugar syrup, pour into the freezer, and partially freeze. When the sherbet is of the consistency of a soft mush, open the freezer and fold into the sherbet one egg-white which has been beaten until very stiff and to which two tablespoonfuls of sugar have been added. Freeze until stiff enough to serve. Serve garnished with Maraschino cherries cut in small pieces.

For Banana sherbet combine one cup of water and one and one-half cups of sugar and boil for five minutes. Cool thoroughly. Meanwhile, mash six medium sized bananas or press through a potato ricer. To the banana pulp add two cups of orange juice and two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice. Add to the sugar syrup, pour into the freezer, and partially freeze. With one egg-white beaten until stiff, with two tablespoonfuls of sugar, fold into the sherbet and freeze until stiff enough to serve. Garnish with sliced oranges in serving.

Ginger Sherbet
And one quart of water to one cupful of sugar and three-quarters of a cupful of chopped preserved ginger (with the syrup). Cook for 10 minutes, cool and add half a cupful of orange juice and a quarter of a cupful of lemon juice. Freeze slowly.

Grape Ice
Put one pound of strained honey, one quart of water, one pint of grape juice and half a teaspoonful of cream of tartar over the fire and cook for four minutes, after reaching the boiling point. When cold, add another pint of grape juice, the strained juice of one lemon and freeze. Just as soon as the ice begins to congeal stir in a quarter pint of thick cream, whipped solid, and stiffly whipped white of one egg. Continue to freeze until firm and smooth.

Coffee Frappe
Dissolve one cupful of sugar in three large cupfuls of clear, strong black coffee and add a few grains of salt and a teaspoonful of gelatine softened in two tablespoonfuls of cold water. Cool, add one cupful of stiffly whipped cream, half a teaspoonful of vanilla extract and the stiffly beaten white of one egg. Freeze slowly and serve in sherbet cups, garnished with mounds of sweetened whipped cream. Sprinkle with chopped nut meats.

Maple Parfait
Beat the yolks of four eggs until light and lemon-colored and pour on two cupfuls of hot maple syrup. Mix well and cook in the upper part of the double boiler, until the mixture is quite thick. Cool, chill and gradually blend with one pint of heavy cream, whipped solid. Turn into a mold with a water tight cover and bury in ice and rock salt for four hours before serving.

Ginger Ale Sherbet
Mix together one quart bottle of ginger ale, the juice of two lemons and four oranges, three-quarters of a cupful of powdered sugar, half a cupful of chopped Maraschino cherries with the cordial and a few drops of mint extract. Freeze slowly and serve sprinkled with minced candied lemon peel.

Marshmallow Ice Cream
Prepare a pint of rich boiled custard as for the fruit cream, and have it well sweetened. Cool flavor with one teaspoonful of vanilla extract, chill and add one cupful of heavy cream, beaten solid. Season with a few grains of salt and freeze slowly until the mixture becomes mushy. Then add half a pound of fresh marshmallows, cut in shreds and finish freezing. This cream is delightful served with a chocolate, maple or coffee sauce.

EIGHT HOUR DAY STILL FAVORED

Board of Conciliation Finds 'No Cause to Recede from Mill Decision'

The state board of conciliation which, during the controversy between mill operators and employees at Klamath Falls, favored the continuance of an eight-hour day instead of the employers' proposed nine hours, has found no reason since that time to recede from the position it then took, according to a letter accompanying its annual statement, filed in the governor's office here yesterday.

"We would state that though strike conditions, so-called, have nominally ceased, yet industry in that section still remains seriously affected and hampered by the position taken by the operators who refused the eight-hour session. Furthermore," the statement points out, "the Long-Bell company, one of the largest lumber operators in the United States, with heavy holdings in the northwest, has but recently announced its intention, since the decision, of maintaining the eight hour day in its respective plants."

In reviewing its 12 months' work, the board explains its activities in connection with the longshoremen's strike in Portland. Issues involved in the controversy were submitted to the board at the request of the employees and the United States shipping board representatives. The findings of the board, the statement explains, although rejected by the employers' union, were generally adopted in essence.

"We are of the opinion that the work of this body has been substantially helpful and is making for industrial peace and efficiency," William Woodward, chairman of the board, concludes his letter.

HOLDING A HUSBAND REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

CHAPTER 73

WHAT MADGE'S FATHER DID FOR HER AND THEN ADVISED.

I found no traditional "blessed relief" in tears. Instead, when the hysterical burst of weeping had finished shaking and tearing me, I lay back upon the pillows of my berth with a racking headache and a deadly feeling of illness creeping over me.

I was too exhausted to rise, and I was glad indeed that my father had arranged the door so that he could push it open without my assistance. I knew that his solicitude would station him near enough the door to keep every one else away, and I longed for the moment when he should redeem his promise to bring Junior to me. I felt so ill that a dread of being alone began to oppress me.

Yet when my father's gentle knock sounded upon the door preliminary to his entrance, and Junior toddled to my side with rapturous little gurples of "Ma-ma, ma-ma," I found that I could not endure even my baby's prattle. I wanted—needed—the ministrations of a physician or a nurse. All other companionship wearied me infinitely.

My father looked at me keenly, then he swiftly came to my side, lifted the baby boy and carried him to the couch, where he left him delightedly playing with one of the toys which my father makes a practice of carrying in his coat pockets for the child he idolizes.

When he had returned as swiftly to me I felt him taking my pulse, kissing my forehead and my palms lightly to test my temperature. It is a test I often use when I do not wish to disturb my child with a clinical thermometer—one which my mother taught me years ago. I could almost hear her voice instructing me about it.

"Your hands vary with external conditions," she used to say. "They are seldom an accurate guide. But unless you are in a fever yourself your lips are always the same temperature, and you can safely trust them."

I felt too exhausted to open my eyes, which had closed upon the picture of my baby boy playing contentedly upon the couch, but I wondered weakly if my father's brain was busy with the same memory as mine, only extending farther back. Had he stood with my mother beside me as a little child while she gave me this same test? I was sure of it as I heard the quick intake of breath as he raised his head and the involuntary groan which he smothered so quickly as to make his very existence a question.

I must either have dozed or lost consciousness for a moment, for the next thing I knew was my father's voice calling sharply, "Margaret," and upon my weak response the alighting of his arm under my shoulders and the pressing of a spoon against my lips. A Potent Restorative.

"Take this," he commanded.
