Vacation Time Books Suggested

For each person the "Book for the shady nook" in August would seem to be the one he can read with interest for a time, to cast aside when the moods come, to listen to the wild waves, or to ruminate lazily on the beauties of nature, while the fragrance of the pines steeples the senses.

"Charles O'Malley" by Lever. Here is love, adventure and fun in the daring life of the gallant, English dragoon, each episode new and interesting in itself.

"Reynard, the Fox," by Macnefield. The pursuit of the English fox hunt is told in swift, racy poetry.

"Adventures With Birds" by Hudson. This bird lover and master tells his fascinating experiences.

"The Desert," by Van Dyke. The beauties of the unbroken trail and the unblazed mountains of the desert world of the southwest are pictured with fine appreciation and rare imagery.

"The Eternal Masculine," by Andrews. These clever stories of men and outings are full of life and humor. Its companion volume is "The Eternal Feminine."

"The Great Modern American Stories" selected by Howells from many authors, is probably the most satisfactory collection that has been made in recent years.

"The Catskills" by Longstreet. A summer's experience is told in a chatty style.

"Talks in a Library," by Hutten. The author recounts in an intimate manner incidents in his acquaintanceship with people famous some fifty years ago.

"Japan, Real and Imaginary" by Greenlee. Amusing experiences and keen observation together with beautiful pictures of the land romantic with goshas and richhaws make this charming book.

"Songs of the Trail," by Knibbs. These vigorous poems are full of the atmosphere of the plains and the mountains.

"Adventures in Contentment" by Grayson. There is little plot; the author holds our interest by his simple experiences with Mother Earth.

"Labrador Doctor." The missionary doctor of Newfoundland and Labrador tells his life story.

"Scottish Chiefs," by Porter. This romantic old tale is full of the thrills of danger and chivalry.

wishes to be intelligent about all the wonders of his great state will enjoy these chapters on our wild life.

"Life's Minor Collisions" by Warner. These unassuming, interesting essays are most to be appreciated when read aloud to a member of one's own family.

"A Winter Circuit of Our Arctic Coast" by Hudson. If the weather proves to be hot, this should be a cool refreshing trip to take in imagination.

No wise traveler will forget his guides to birds, trees, wild flowers, sea shells or other forms of nature that appeal to him, for new species are sure to appear to be identified.
