

BOOK PRAISES OREGON LAWS

Professor Lagerquist of Chicago Writes of State Irrigation Code

Significant recognition is given the Oregon irrigation district law and the plan of handling irrigation development in this state in a new book on finance by Walter Edwards Lagerquist, professor of finance in Northwestern university, Chicago. The title of the work is "Investment Analysis." Commenting on the Oregon method Professor Lagerquist says: "The irrigation district laws of the state of Oregon are now (1920) regarded as the best of the existing state irrigation laws. Particular care has been given in the framing of this statute to such matters as the creation of a district through an election by the citizens of the district, the issuance of bonds, the confirmation and ratification by the courts of the legality of the issues, the certification of the bonds, the sur- antee of interest under cer- conditions, etc. The Oregon sta- ute is worth of much more de- tailed consideration than the chapter allows." "In view of the fact that pro- fessor Lagerquist's book deals with finances generally and will therefore be of general interest, his favorable comment should be of material aid in financing ir- rigation projects," says Percy C. Copper, Oregon state engineer. "An eastern outlet for irrigation securities is very desirable. This can be secured only by establish- ing confidence in these securities. "The irrigation district law is the foundation for these securi- ties. Several of the other west- ern states have followed Oregon states have followed Oregon states in the enactment of similar statutes. The care of the matter made by Professor Lagerquist is his high commendation and the value in the financing of our ir- rigation program."
