BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago, the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome. Nowadays by asking at any drug store for Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

MOVIE GOSSIP

MARION DAVIES, who comes here Sunday in her greatest success, Marie Corelli's "The Young Diana." This will be a pre-release showing, Salem gets it before any city in the state. One of the leading houses in Portland shows it two weeks later.

Oregon—Agnes Ayres in "Borderland." Liberty—Elaime Hammerstein in "Handcuffs and Kisses." Bligh—Bill Hart in "Riddle Gawne." Tomorrow at the Grand—"The Isle of Zorda."

The "Isle of Zorda" which comes Saturday and Sunday is in a class by itself in more ways than one. The scenery in this big super feature is something that is not seen in every motion picture release. The cast is an exceptionally strong one and the story requires real dramatic acting. The harem and dance scenes stand out forcibly in the production and taking everything into consideration, very few films will surpass it. The story is one that will grip and thrill one. It has a real plot. The story that the film is taken from is "Mathias Sandorf" and is regarded as a masterpiece.

The picture that is generally conceded to be the greatest comedy production that was ever made will be shown in Salem soon. It is Mark Twain's famous story, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court." It concerns a modern slinky Yankee in an old English court and is the greatest laughing success ever placed on the screen. Harry Myers is starred. He is supported by Pauline Starke and the cast is one of the strongest ever assembled. It is so funny that it would make Buster Keaton laugh out loud. Everyone who saw this wonderful production has absolutely laughed until their sides ached. It is simply a scream all the way through and it is a multiple reel feature. When it was first released a few months ago, it enjoyed a longer run in some of the big cities than any film ever shown. A better comedy has never been made and it is not likely that another will be produced for a long time that will compare with it. It is a clean wholesome story, the same as all of Mark Twain's books are and more laughable situations were never shown on the stage or on the screen.

for Norma will play the lead in her latest vehicle. The latest report from the big cities is that "Monte Cristo" is still packing them in at top prices of $1.50. In some cities this wonderful film has been running for weeks, with no sign of a let up in business.

William Farnum has a wonderful dramatic part in "Shackles of Gold" based on Henri Bernstein's greatest play "Samson."

Mary Pickford has completed her "Tess of the Storm Country" and her husband Doug Fairbanks is working on a new production.

Helene Chadwick has been selected to play the leading role in Rupert Hughes picture "Gimme."

William DeMille is working on "Clarence," a big comedy stage success from the pen of Booth Tarkington. The cast will include Wallace Reid, Agnes Ayres, Theodore Roberts, May McAvoy and Kathryn Williams.

"To Have and To Hold," a famous story, has been filmed with the leading roles taken by Betty Compson and Bert Lytell. The cast also includes Theodore Roberts and Theo. Kosloff.

Charles Eytan, general manager of the Lasky studios and his wife Kathryn Williams are touring in China.

HOLDING A HUSBAND REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

THE WAY AUNT DORA PAIGE MADE MADGE REALLY WANT TO BE FED. As I watched Jupe—the Negro servant of Miss Dora Paige—deftly unpacking under the direction of his venerable mistress the contents of the hamper he very lively dismay seized me. I had just finished the hearty meal which Dr. Paige had prescribed, and I had done it full justice. I felt as if it would be impossible for me to eat another mouthful. But evidently there was no way out of it for the little old lady was arranging a tray, which Jupe also carried in, with some of the thinnest and daintiest china and glass I had ever seen, while the silver forks and spoons which she put beside them would have rent a collector wild. Evidently she had brought her most treasured heirlooms to my bedside, and I knew that a refusal to eat the food she had brought would give her mortal offense.

The Horns of Dilemma.

I could see that a bowl of chilled and jellied chicken broth a glass of mixed fruit juices, and a wonderfully concocted mixture of something that looked like sea-form upon gold had been placed upon the tray which Jupe held with the imperturbability of an ebony statue. Aunt Dora Paige gave them a final critical look of inspection, her head held on one side like a dainty canary, then she turned briskly to me. "Let me shake up your pillows, child," she said tenderly, advancing toward me.

I knew that if she succeeded in her purpose she would in all probability discover the ruse that Leila and I had played upon her. I could imagine her indignant, grievous, old eyes when she found out that I was almost fully dressed beneath the bed-clothing. But I had no defense against her. I looked helplessly at Leila, and she sprang to the rescue.

"Let me do that, auntie, dear," she cooed, as with quick deftness she stepped between her aunt and me, and with my cooperation had me propped with pillows in most interesting invalid fashion in no time. As she bent over I gave her a quick, whispered warning.

"Find Mother Graham and explain this before she enters the room," I muttered tensely. A quick bob of Leila's head showed that she understood me.

"Heah, Jupe," Miss Paige commanded, "set that tray down on that table and bring this little stand right up to the bed. Theah! that's right. Now put the tray on the stand. Theah, my dear, now we're ready. I just want to see you clean up every bit of this."

The Mystery of Jim Paige.

I felt morally certain that a fit of indigestion or worse awaited me; I obeyed her command. But I also felt that I would endure almost anything rather than disappoint the tender graciousness which shone from the clear blue eyes of the little old lady. So with a jaunty imitation of gusto, for which I felt that much credit should be given me, I began eating the food she had brought. I finished with real resentment that I couldn't bring to their delicious delicacy the appetite they deserved.

Aunt Dora beamed as I finished the contents of the tray. I looked from her face to the austere countenance of my mother-in-law, who had entered the room under Leila's escort while I was eating, and felt an almost irresistible desire to laugh aloud. She had greeted Miss Paige graciously, but she was trying with indifferent success to keep from betraying her worry over my predicament. That she had disapproved of Dr. Paige's prescription of a hearty meal and a walk I well knew, though the big physician had coaxed her into tacit agreement with him. But this second installment of food I knew must have shocked her careful soul beyond measure.

"You have had a physician, of course, ma'am." Aunt Dora turned with a pretty air of mingled deference and authority to my mother-in-law.

"We had a relative of yours, I think," my mother-in-law returned.

ed, smiling. It would have taken even sterner stuff than Mother Graham to keep from smiling at Aunt Dora Paige.

"Jim Paige!" the little old lady exclaimed, clapping her hands together softly. "Isn't this a wonderful coincidence, girls, Jim Paige has been here. Didn't you just love him?" She turned to me with a pretty impetuosity which made me realize anew what a wonderful girlish charm had been here.
