

SOCIETY

Announcing the engagement of their daughter, Miss Ruth, Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Leining were hosts at a delightful party Wednesday evening. Miss Ruth Leining will be married in the near future to Carl R. Miller. Franklin B. Launer played several piano numbers during the evening which were delightfully received.

The guests invited for the occasion were:

Ida Vogt, Violet Peters, Ida Hilliken, Minnie Miller, Edna Miller, Bessie Edger, Lydia Denny, Nettie Denny, Lillian, Myrtle and Gladys Chambers, Lillian Garnjobst, Ester Leining, Carl Miller, Harold Eakin, Louis Oldenburg, Harold Latin, Franklin Launer, Vera Tyler, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Harker, Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Hilliker, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Gagnon and Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Miller.

Dr. and Mrs. Burton A. Myers are expected to arrive from San Francisco the first of the week to visit Mrs. Myers' father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Elvain. They will spend a month here.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hunt and son Kenneth, left Thursday for California where they will visit for six months. They expect to travel throughout the state.

Mrs. O. P. Dabney, of Los Angeles, a former resident of Salem, is a guest of Mrs. Mason Bishop for a few days.

CLUBS AND WOMEN'S ACTIVITIES

The organization of a section of the Salem Women's club for the study of Shakespeare during the coming winter was discussed during the meeting of the club yesterday. Mrs. C. C. Clark, president of the club, called attention to the fact that few members could form such a section and choose their own leader. The organization of other sections especially one for the study of government was suggested by Mrs. Clark.

Reports from the delegates to the state federation convention last spring were given. In the absence of Mrs. A. F. Marcus her report was read by Mrs. W. E. Anderson who later gave her report. Mrs. Jennie Barrat gave a report of the last day of the convention. Mrs. Marcus' report covered the social activities of the convention while Mrs. Anderson took up the business and talks given.

The building fund contains a total of $1073.16. According to the report of the treasurer, Mrs. Lowell Tweddle, Mrs. Clark called the attention of the members to the concert which was to be given Friday by Mrs. Mary Schultz and Franklin Launer which is to be a benefit for the Salem hospital.

The county federation will be entertained in Salem during the month of October but the exact date has not been set. Mrs. W. E. Kirk of the Salem Women's club is president of the county federation. A reception for Mrs. Ida E. Callahan and Mrs. Kirk at which all past presidents of the club will be special guests will be held at the November meeting.

The social committee of which Mrs. John J. Roberts was chairman, served tea following the meeting.

The women of Salem Heights will meet Tuesday to arrange for the organization of a Smith-Hughes class in millinery and sewing. The women who are interested are being asked to attend whether they can begin the first classes or not, according to those in charge.

The American Association of University women will not meet until the third Saturday in October, according to Miss Frances M. Richards, who is temporary chairman of the organization. The officers for the coming year were not chosen at the last meeting in the spring because it was thought best to wait until fall when others might join the new branch of the national organization.

"Vacation Notes" will be the keynote of the meeting Monday evening of Chapter AB of the P. E. O. This chapter will take up a study of their constitution followed by a study of South America. Mrs. T. E. McCroskey will be hostess for the group this week. This is the first meeting of the fall. Dr. Mary Rowland is president of this chapter which was organized last spring.

"I don't think it is possible for any one to be other than well down here, it is?" I smiled at her, and knew by her answering smile that I had struck the right chord.

"Even the people with one foot in the grave pull it out after they've been down here a few weeks," she said, with a humorous quirk of her thin lips. "But I'd know you weren't down here for your health, even if I hadn't been told of your contemplated attendance at the Paig-Durkee wedding."

She put her head to one side and gave such a delicious imitation of Aunt Dora Paige's voice and manner that I laughed outright. But Mrs. Lukens' face was grave as that of the traditional jurist.

The Telephone Call.

"If I don't stop chattering about our air I'll forget my errand," she said briskly. "I came over to tell you that one of your friends over at Miss Dora Paige's telephoned this morning that she wished you would call her up just as soon as it was convenient for you to do so. She said she didn't wish you to be disturbed if you were asleep, so I have been watching until I saw you outside. The telephone is in my own home. Bring the baby right along with you."

But that is one permission of which I rarely avail myself. I resolved years ago that if I ever had a child I would not permit it to become the abysmal nuisance which appears to be the inevitable fate of some children. Junior is just beginning to investigate everything within his reach. I did not propose either to risk Mrs. Lukens' breakable possessions or to bother her with his care while I telephoned.

"That will be entirely unnecessary," I smiled. "You know there are two devoted grandparents within call."

CHAPTER 119
WHY MRS. LUKENS CALLED ON MADGE

"Good morning, Mrs. Graham. I am glad you are feeling better." Mrs. Lukens, trig as a girl, despite her 70 years, came briskly down the steps to the sandy path, up and down which I was trundling Junior in his go-cart. It was the first time I had seen her, save for the fleeting glimpses I had of her the night of our arrival.

But the impression I had received of them, of an indomitable spirit triumphing over age and infirmity, was confirmed by her appearance. There were traces of frailty about her, but I could see that Mrs. Lukens would consider it a deep disgrace, if she thought any one observed them. That she was a woman of individuality I knew from her manner of addressing me. She had never been introduced to me, yet she spoke to me as though she had known me for years, and she neither "hoped" nor "trusted" I was feeling better—two of my pet abominations of speech. I warmed to her instantly.

"I don't think it is possible for any one to be other than well down here, it is?" I smiled at her, and knew by her answering smile that I had struck the right chord.

"Even the people with one foot in the grave pull it out after they've been down here a few weeks," she said, with a humorous quirk of her thin lips. "But I'd know you weren't down here for your health, even if I hadn't been told of your contemplated attendance at the Paig-Durkee wedding."

not heard" was hers. I was sure, and I made a quick little resolve that Junior should not be much in evidence when she was near.

"Oh, father!" I raised my voice slightly, and my father, who had been reading his newspaper upon the veranda, rose instantly and came toward me.

"What is it, daughter?" he asked, with the beautiful courtesy which marks his every word and action toward me.

"I didn't mean you to get up," I said contritely. "I was coming to you. Would you very much mind taking care of Junior for a few minutes while I telephone?" I smiled at him roguishly.

"I think I might manage to undergo the ordeal," he smiled back. Then he held out his arms for Junior.

"Want to come to grandpa, little man?" he asked coaxingly. Junior needed no second invitation. He scrambled up from his go-cart with such precipitation that if I hadn't caught him he would have tumbled on his nose.

"Dan-put, wide baby?" he queried, with the evident remembrance of Banbury Cross expeditions upon his grandfather's foot.

"A big, long ride," his grandfather assured him and as I departed with Mrs. Lukens to answer the telephone message which troubled me vaguely, I heard my small son's gurgle of delight as his grandfather began the famous ride which generations of babies have taken.

The death of Mrs. Frank H. Jones of Chicago, 6044 was Nellie Grant, only daughter of President Grant, will recall memories of a half-century ago, when Nellie Grant was one of the big attractions of the White House. Her heart was won by Algernon Sartoris, a young Englishman, but the union was not a happy one, as her father predicted when the alliance was consummated. But the headstrong Nellie had her way.
