

MACHINES SHORT, CLASSES ARE OUT

Economy of Salem School Board Makes Some Curtailments Necessary

Because there are not enough typewriting machines, and the district felt that it hadn't the money to buy them without heavier taxes, a considerable number of the students who wanted to take the commercial course in the Salem high school have had to be refused admission to the typewriting classes.

The same thing happened in the machine shop, where a course in applied mechanics has been taught with the backing of the federal vocational training department. There weren't enough machines or enough room, and so ambitious, mechanically-inclined lads lose out. The school is much more crowded than it was on Monday, the first day. In the high school, 52 more pupils were registered, bringing the number up to 718. The figures had not been compiled for the grade and junior high schools, but it is understood that about the same proportion of newcomers appeared in these also, which would make the total registration close to 3500 for the second day.

Careful scheduling of the buying periods for the various grades made it possible to get all the pupils served with their books, so that regular lessons were begun Tuesday in the grade schools. The high school pupils did not get their books until Tuesday. They will have their first recitations today.

The first assembly of the year was held in the high school auditorium Tuesday forenoon. Prof. J. C. Nelson gave a brief statement of the school rules, and several class and student body announcements were made. All the classes will be organized this week, and the Clarion will make its first appearance next week; it is understood.

Some confusion seems to have followed lack of knowledge of just where the school lines run. A few pupils reported to the wrong school houses, and they will have to be reapportioned where they belong. In general, the school authorities decline to put pupils out of their own proper school zones, though where one grade in one school is overcrowded, some pupils near the borders of that district may be shifted to other districts for better service.

Tokens to Be Sold for Assistance to Disabled

"Forget-Me-Not"—fitting emblem of the soldiers who suffered in the service of their country and of humanity in the World war—is to be the slogan and the token for the day devoted to the remembrance of the disabled veterans. Saturday, November 4.

The day, as outlined by the Association of Disabled American Veterans of the World War, is to be a practical demonstration of how much the country really cares for its crippled soldiers. Forget-me-not tags are to be sold, and any one can have a dozen tags, or an armload, or make a silent gift without a single paper evidence of his regard. The money goes without a cent of salaries anywhere directly into the national fund to pay for summer camps, for hospitalization, for many of the decent services that the nation could give to its brave defenders.

It has been thought that this national day of remembrance, when the people shall have the chance to give voluntarily, will bring life and cheer to a host of the sufferers from the war.

Mrs. Frank Elliott of Salem has been named as chairman for the Forget-Me-Not campaign. She will appoint her own working committees and they will soon be ready to announce their plans for the day.

Driers Are Inspected By Man From O. A. C.

OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, Corvallis, Oct. 3.—E. H. Wiegand, professor of horticultural products, has returned from a trip in the lower Willamette valley where prune driers at Salem, Albany, Jefferson, Portland, Sheridan and Dallas were inspected by him.

The re-circulation system was installed in these driers this summer, on the same plan as the one used at the college.

The re-circulation of air in the tunnels is a new idea carried out in research work at the horticultural products building and gives promise to revolutionize the prune drying industry," said Mr. Wiegand, "making a better quality product at half the drying time, thus doubling the capacity of the drier."

It is estimated that the annual saving to the farmers of the state will amount to one-quarter of a million dollars, with approximately one-half the fuel consumed.

The different growers that have installed this system are enthusiastic over the results attained.

PRINCE SNUBS KING BROTHER

Man Who Declined Crown Refuses to Accept $4000 Yearly Allowance

BELGRADE, Sept. 1.—(By A. P. Mail.)—Prince George, elder son of the late King Peter of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes, who in 1909 renounced his right to the Serbian throne, has declined an annual allowance from the government of 300,000 dinars, about $4000 at the present rate of exchange, as not in consonance with his princely dignity.

At a crown council presided over by King Alexander, the prince's brother, it was resolved that Prince George should be deprived of all royal privileges and held responsible for verbal and written attacks against either the royal house or Yugoslavia, or the authorities.
