The general topic of Mr. Blower's talks will be "Business and Social Progress," and are intended to be especially helpful to men and women engaged in business. Mr. Blower will explain why men fail after reaching the age of 35; will tell why men and women have physical breakdowns early in life; why women lose the charm of personality early in life, and why the rich get richer and men are round pegs in square holes.

In other words Mr. Blower himself is an example of success against great obstacles. Born in poverty in England he came to the cod fields of this state when a child of 3 years. In spite of seeming insurmountable obstacles he acquired an academic education, and then through his own efforts pursued courses in leading universities of America and England, attaining high degrees and honors.

Taking up the work of lecturer and teacher Mr. Blower has won prominence and won a large measure of success. His services have been sought by industrial leaders of the country and large numbers have inspired to larger efforts and success through his instructions. The public is invited to attend each of the lectures.

Musical

Royal Dadmun, a well known American baritone, who will give the first concert of the Salem Musical Bureau, November 17, is a singer whose fine voice and conscientious work has made for him a familiar place on the concert stage for the last 12 years. He has been soloist with all of the leading orchestras in the east and is popular as an oratorio singer.

Marcel Dupre, French organist at the Cathedral Notre Dame in Paris, will give the second number of the series. The organ concert will be given at the First Christian church Friday November 24. M. Dupre plays without notes and entirely from memory all of Bach's works. His improvisations are inclined toward modern harmonics and his numbers are considered amazingly clever. This concert is being sponsored by the Salem Music Teachers association.

Marguerite de Alvarez, pronounced d'Alvarath, principal contralto of the Chicago Opera company who is now on a tour in Australia, will give the last concert for the season, December
