"I cant believe it of Rita-I can't believe it!" She murmured the words over and over, dazedly, as I bathed her face, plaited her hair and wound a towel around her head. As I tucked the covers around her I surveyed her with satisfaction. "Now you look more like a headache and less like a heartache," I said. "And don't ever dare to tell me that you, ever loved Alfred, You 'can't believe it of Rita, but you could believe far worse of the man you

I left her to think that over while I went to summon Rita Brown. That worthy su lenly followed me to the door of Lelia's room. There I turned and faced

"You have done your develish work so well," I said measuredly, 'that it is going to be a hard task to convince Lelia you were lying. I leave that to your own ingenuity, only remember that it must be thoroughly performed before

"Say, don't you think you've talked enough," she snarled. "Lord! I don't wonder the Dickybird's ducking from under if he has to listen that clack all the time. Now, I'm not a clear fool. I know when I'm up against it, and it stands to reason I'm going to do this job right. But I'll be d-d if I'm not going to do it in my own way. So shut up."
