If you have occasion to pronounce Fascist, the new leaders in the public life of Italy, call it Fah-shee-tee.

Mussolini has been given a vote of confidence as Italian premier. David Lloyd George no doubt wonders how he did it.

There is no sense in having the taxpayers charged with any of the cost of running the penitentiary. It will run itself, and pay a profit. It is given a chance; besides paying a small wage to every inmate who works.

Every red-blooded American will be glad to note that the United States is showing officially that it has come to life and is demanding open doors and open diplomacy in Europe.

When the Boys' and Girls' library opened in Toronto something was done which could well be duplicated in many cities of the world. The great need for just such an institution is apparent when it is recalled that, whereas in 1909 the boys and girls of Toronto borrowed fewer than 50,000 books from the public libraries, in 1921 they borrowed more than 500,000, and doubtless such figures could be reproduced elsewhere. The Christian Science Monitor says this Toronto library has a young people's room and a high school section. Little by little the children of the world are coming into their own.

Ohio has elected a woman, Miss Florence E. Allen, to the state supreme court. She has been serving as judge of the common pleas court in Cuyahoga county and was the first woman to be so elected. She was chosen as Democrat and Independent, whatever that sort of a combination would be. Seems that old state has gone to the dogs since we left it.—Los Angeles Times.

The flax plant at the Oregon state penitentiary can be made to pay all the expenses of that institution; to pay for all the buildings ever built there and for all the land ever purchased for the institution—and then to pay for all the expenses of the institution for the feeble minded, and part of the cost of keeping up the other strictly state institutions. There is no use whatever of the taxpayers of Oregon ever in the future paying a cent toward the cost of maintaining the penitentiary, or towards the cost of building, machinery, tools, or anything else. The Minnesota penitentiary at Stillwater has paid for itself from the ground up, and it is now making a profit of about $300,000 a year, in its twine factory; mostly blinder twine, and the raw materials come from abroad; the sisal from Yucatan, Mexico, and the manilla hemp from the Philippines. In the case of the Oregon penitentiary, the raw materials for the flax industry can be produced here, and all the money kept at home. The Stillwater penitentiary has only one profit; outside of the cheap twine for the farmers of Minnesota. The Oregon prison, in the flax and linen industries, can have three or four or a dozen or a score of profits—as far as it is found practicable to go; and some of this can be passed on to the institution for the feeble minded, the asylum for the insane, the deaf mute and blind schools, etc. And to expert workmen on the outside. With the opportunities that are here, it would be sheer idiocy for the taxpayers of Oregon to keep on providing money for the expenses of the penitentiary, or for buildings or machinery there. The Minnesota prison borrowed money, in the first place, to buy machinery, on debentures. But it paid it all back, with interest. The taxpayers did not pay a cent. More than this, the Stillwater prison is one of the finest and best regulated in the world. Every prisoner there who works receives wages, from 25 cents to $1 a day; whether he works in the twine factory the factory making binders, mowers and rakes for the farmers, or in the gardens or on the farm, or as a tailor, barber, cook, dairyman, waiter, or what not. This system can be duplicated here at our prison—but with an industry that will interfere less with free labor; one that will be much more profitable; one that will keep all the money at home, and one that will at the same time help in developing what will ultimately become the greatest industry in Oregon—the flax industry, carried up through all the grades to the making of fine linens and fabrics.

Mussolini Not Flattered By Vote of Confidence

ROME, Nov. 27.—(By the Associated Press.)—The senate this evening gave a unanimous vote of confidence to the cabinet of Benito Mussolini after Mussolini had delivered an effective speech in which he said he would be pleased if the senate accorded him a unanimous vote, but that he would not be excessively flattered by it.

CHAPTER 172 WHY THE BRIDEGROOM CONGRATULATED HIS MOTHER.

"Mother, dearest," whispered Alfred Durkee. "I am so proud of you."

I caught the words, and echoed them in my heart, as I stood behind my little neighbor, waiting for my turn to congratulate Alfred. Little Mrs. Durkee had come through her ordeal with flying colors. Her eyes and smile were bright as those of Leila herself as she kissed her new daughter and passed on to be swept into the impetuous embrace of her tall son.

"Not half so proud as I am of my son and my new daughter," she said with the pretty graciousness which is so charming a characteristic of her when she chooses to exercise it.

I drew a long breath of relief as I heard her response, for I knew that once having regained her poise she would not lose it again, at least while the wedding festivities were in progress.

"Well, Mrs. Madge," Alfred smiled down at me delightedly. "I think it is indeed well Alfred!" I replied, shaking his hand cordially. "I fancy you don't need my formal congratulations to tell you how delighted I am, and what a fortunate youth I think you."

Dicky's Handclasp. "Aren't you going to congratulate me, too?" Dicky inquired aggressively, and there was an intonation in his voice that made my pulses leap.

"For any particular reason?" I inquired demurely. Under pretence of shaking hands, Dicky squeezed my fingers tightly.

"If there weren't so many people here I'd illustrate and punctuate my meaning," he said in a low tone. "As it is, just consider yourself kissed."

His eyes held mine with the same look that had come into them when the old clergyman had pronounced the final words of the wedding ceremony. I gazed back at him for a breathless moment with all my heart in my eyes, then slipped past him sedately as the crowd of relatives and friends bore down upon the wedding party with congratulations and best wishes and kisses.

I knew that I was expected to remain near the newly-wedded couple. Aunt Dora had decreed that she, Mrs. Curtis, Mother Graham, Maj. Grantland and I were to have supper at the same table at which sat Alfred, Leila, Dicky, Edith and Dr. Jim Paige. So I stepped into the first vacant nook I could find to wait Aunt Dora's pleasure, and from its vantage surveyed the gay groups around Leila and Alfred. As I watched them I was psychically aware of some one gazing at me. Turning, I saw Edith Fairfax staring at me with an expression, the meaning of which I could not fathom, although I recognized distinct pain in her eyes.

What Edith Permitted. She had heard Dicky, and his tribute to me had wounded her! For a moment, as our eyes clashed and held, I felt fiercely resentful that anything my husband could say to me would matter to her. Then with a little exultant breath I turned my eyes and my thoughts away from her.

What she thought or did mattered as little to me as did the fact that Dicky by virtue of his position as best man would be obliged to spend the evening beside her. I had experienced one of the rare moments that come to a woman who loves her husband, and I defied Fate to touch me.

The rest of the evening was like a dream to me. I chatted and laughed, and ate the delicious viands Aunt Dora's old cook had provided, and duly applauded when Leila, as she went upstairs to change her gown, threw her bouquet to the laughing group of girls crowded around the staircase. I was sure that Leila had aimed it so that it would fall into her sister's hands, but Edith permitted a younger girl, a merry tomboy, to forestall her. I saw her do it, and guessed that she would not let even the superstition of a speedy marriage into her life.

But I had far pleasanter things to meditate upon than Edith's reasons for missing the wedding bouquet, which, according to the old superstition, would bring her a husband within a year. For Dicky, instead of playing the devoted admirer, as I had feared, was giving only the most perfunctory attention to Edith. He apparently had deliberately stepped aside to give Dr. Jim Paige a chance to talk to her, and Dr. Jim was making the most of the opportunity afforded him.

Little Mrs. Durkee, Mother Graham and Aunt Dora, seated together, had two devoted cavaliers in Dicky and Maj. Grant-land. One would have thought that they were girls of 20, so assiduous were the two men in their attentions. And I, though for the first time in many moons, found myself a decided wallflower, yet I was happier than I had been for months past.

But though I understood and loved Dicky for his extravagant devotion to the elderly women, yet I could not help wondering just what impelled Hugh Grantland's action.

BITS FOR BREAKFAST

Webfoot weather again.

All is going well with the Willamette university million and a quarter endowment campaign. It will be a great thing for Salem to see it finished.

Nowadays the up to date farmer raises his own feedstuffs and foodstuffs. What keeps him strapped, says a Salem cynic, is buying his Fordstuffs.

Juneau, Alaska, has established a college. It will presumably teach football, baseball and snowball.

A Salem old bach says women wish for long life, but never old age; that a girl will listen to soft nothings when she thinks they mean something; that a girl's palmy days are when she receives the most offers for her hand, and that casting sheep's eyes at a man is one way a girl has of pulling the wool over his eyes.

Also, this old batch advises a girl he knows who talks of her beauty naps to take good, long sleeps.

There is a man in Salem who says he is going to see if he cannot have glands put into his old Ford and restore its youth.

Owing to the troubles in Turkey, there will be a few of us in Salem who will have to be satisfied on Thanksgiving with goose, pork chops or ham and eggs.

SUCCESSFUL STUDYING

When You Study Together (This is the kind of a series of articles which will help young students to learn more and get better grades by showing them how to study more efficiently.)

Studying with some one can either help you or keep you back. It isn't just studying together that is harmful; it is the way you go about it. If you are studying with some one, the two of you should first of all decide just exactly what it is that you wish to study and how much time you have to spend, avoiding dipping into one thing and then another, neither of you getting anywhere. Do not read a book together.

If you have a number of pages in some book to read, each of you should bring his own book. The fast reader often loses the thought while waiting for the other to turn the page, and the slow reader is inclined to skim the page to catch up with the other. After you have finished reading a chapter or section, tell each other what you have read. First, one can tell all the remembers, and then the other can add points that are left out.

Use Drills Together When you have to memorize verses, drills, or lists of dates, studying together will help you. One of you can be teacher, hearing the other recite and correcting carefully. Then the reciter Correct Written Work One good way to study together is to do written work. In this way you are not so likely to get off the subject as when talking a lesson over. After you have read a lesson, get together and make out some questions that seem to cover it, and then write about those questions. When you have finished, exchange papers, open your books, and see how nearly correct the answers are, giving each other a suggested grade. In seeing what mistakes another has made and looking up the right answers you will remember more easily.

Two people cannot study well together if they simply divide up wouldn't be fun. I'd just have to sit around and look proud and haughty and I couldn't help you, I guess I'll be Cinderella, too."

That evening when Dot's older brother came in from his work he heard the girls talking in the kitchen. Smiling to himself he stole softly through the house. Soon he appeared at the kitchen door, the couch cover draped artistically over one shoulder, his mother's best hat with a plume sitting on top of his head.

"I'm the Fairy Prince," he cried, "and I'm looking for two Cinderellas to drive into town to the movie with me." He produced two big overshoes from behind his back. "Do you know any one these slippers might fit?"

Both girls made a dash for him, shouting with laughter. Grabbing her brother around the neck, Dot cried in delight, "They'd fit us. They'd fit us. I can get both my feet in one," while Florence, suiting her actions to the words, hopped around the kitchen in the big overshoe.

"Now let's sweep the kitchen, and maybe the old witch will set us free sooner," cried Florence, surprised at how much fun they were having.
