IS AN IMPORTANT VISITOR TO SALEM

Three Railroad Systems to Advertise the Great Pacific Northwest

John H. Running, traveling passenger agent of the Great Northern Railway company, was a Salem visitor yesterday.

But his mission was unusual and important. He is furthering the beginnings of a great and persistent and far reaching advertising campaign for the Pacific Northwest, by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific railroads.

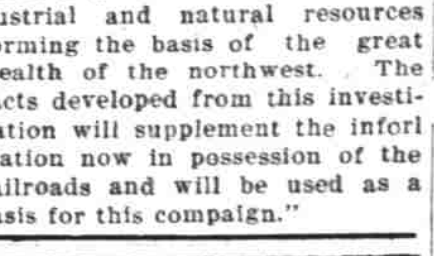

The story of this undertaking is best told in an official announcement, made over the signatures on November 19th of the passenger traffic managers of the three railroad systems as follows: "The Burlington, Great Northern and Northern Pacific railroads have determined on a campaign designed to quicken national interest in the Pacific northwest, i. e. Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming.

"This territory is tremendously rich in natural resources, its agricultural and mineral wealth, its agricultural and mineral wealth, its natural outlets, are assets thoroughly appreciated by dwellers in the northwest, but not by the balance of the country.

"It is the belief of the Burlington, Great Northern and Northern Pacific that the natural development due to the inherent economic possibilities of the northwest can be hastened by consistent and well thought out publicity. It is believed that through such measures the northwest can be established in the national consciousness as a section holding out great appeal to any man who desires to improve his condition.

"To this end, a campaign of national advertising has been planned. The story of the northwest will be told; its history, its development, its economic position, its economic possibilities. The films recently taken for the motion picture library are now being developed. Next comes a campaign which involves the use of the largest national magazines and agricultural publications. This campaign will extend over a period of years, and will commence in the spring of 1923.
