Corn finished at 7-8 off to 3-8 advance, oats up 1-4 to 5-8 and provisions varying from 20 cents decline to five cents gain.

It was only in the last hour of trading that the wheat market plied, significantly. showed any decided upward impetus. Earlier, the sellers outnumbered the buyers, with the bulk of the offerings coming from holders who are in a position to ing appeared to have exhausted ervations in order to give me the the same time the pit became aware that export business on a liberal scale had been in progress and that speculators on the bear side apparently had over-reached themselves at least for the time being. The fact that a considerable part of the foreign participating was to be filled by shipments from ports on the Gulf of Mexico tended to make the advance of the wheat market rather brisk at last.

Corn and oats were governed largely by action of wheat, but corn displayed less power to rally. Large receipts of corn here counted as a bearish factor.

Provisions were dull but for the most part held fairly steady in line with hogs.

"With the limited experience both of you have had with canoes, would be the wisest apparel," his mother put in dryly. "Of all the crazy things to do anyway, this going off on a canoe trip with all leum-approximately 95 per cent you've got in front of you, Mar-Richard hasn't a grain of common sense, but you're a woman, you ought to have some idea of what 'you've got before you."

"But, mother, dear," I protested, "my things are packed, almost down to my toothbrush, and the clothes for my journey are all laid out. It won't take me five minutes to put the last articles in my small bag when I dress tomorrow, and there isn't a thing else to do. You know you wouldn't let me take care of Junior if I did stay at

"I should say not!" she declared emphatically, with an adoring glance toward her idolized grandson, who was building himself a wonderful house of blocks upon the floor. Then it came tumbling down each time just before it was completed, appeared to detract no whit from his gurgling enjoyment of his work. "I've had to do time I was sick. I guess I'll have him all I want now.

"But that's beside the mark," she went on, returning like a homing pigeon to her original subject. "You'll tumble into that river as sure as anything, and then where will your trip North-

"Oh, mother, say not so!" Dicky implored, stretching his arms toward her in a burlesque appeal. "Don't wish us anything like that!"

"I don't want to hear anything from you," she turned on him quickly. "You're the one that's responsible for all this. "I think I can manage to get there by myself," she said, tartly, bending over her sewing again, and evidently dismissing us as unworthy of consideration. Dicky glanced furtively at me.

There was such a boy-caughtstealing-jam look upon his face that I could not resist the temptation to assure him of my understanding of his ruse and forgive ness of it. There was no chance. however, to expres my feeling in any other way than by a slow. comprehending wink.

Dicky started, and his face lighted with appreciative glee. He blew me a kiss over his mother's unsuspecting head and spoke quickly but casually:

"Seriously speaking, Madge, I'd wear that wool jersey suit of yours, with your golf hose and your stoutest, heaviest shoes. WHY MADGE WAS STARTLED AT SIGHT OF THE GUIDE.

Dicky made record time on the ittle trip whose destination I suspected to be the railroad ticket office, came back into the house as surreptitiously as he had left it and went directly to our room. His usual luck was with packing, and it was only when ed, for the second time in returning that I ventured to make any change in my own position which might attract the keen obervation of my mother-in-law.

Dicky is getting along." I remarked casually, rising and putting up my work.

"That's the first sensible thing 've heard you say today," his mother retorted. "You'll probably find him wrapping his golf sticks in his dress shirts. I wish you'd keep him busy long enough for me to go down to the ticket office and back."
