MOTOR COMPANY
IS MOVING IN Bonesteels Expect to Be Well Established in New Plant by January

Because of the remarkably good progress that has been made in their new building, the Bonesteel Motor company is moving into its new home on South Commercial street ahead of the originally scheduled time. They hope to be fully settled there before the first of the year.

The plant is one of the most complete automobile homes anywhere. It comprises three full stories, almost 100 feet square, or almost 30,000 square feet of floor space. There is an easy ramp up which the cars are run on their own power up and down stairs from the street. A covered driveway into the front of the building gives a comfortable place for handling gas and supplies. The company is continuing to specialize in Dodge cars as it has done for years past. The repair department is on the top floor, where there is a wonderfully fine, well-lighted room for mechanical work.

The plant is to be heated by an oversize hot air heater in the basement. Shower baths are provided for the workmen and fine rest rooms on the main floor for visiting tourists and patrons. The building has a large, fine display room where the sample cars are displayed to good advantage. If there is anything lacking in the fine new plant, it is something that has popped up since they started to build.

PEOPLE

Food for Thought by Parents; and All of Us
Editor Statesman:

During the past week half a dozen high school boys were discovered as making up an amateur burglars' ring which had planned and was carrying out a systematic series of robberies in Salem. All of these boys were less than 18 and consequently came before the juvenile court; another, and older boy, formerly of Salem but no living in Portland, was also implicated and was bound over to the grand jury.

Such a deplorable affair is sufficient to make the good citizens of self-satisfied Salem pause and consider who it was that failed in responsibility. Of course, it was the boys first of all, but they appear to have had practically no sense of responsibility. Most of them came from good homes, homes and home life of which they were inclined to complain as being too strict. Not one of these lads had any reason to pass up the blame. But the responsibility goes further. These parents and homes were indulgent.
If there was any restraint, it was not always reasonable. It was were persistently away from the fireside at night. Athletics, street wandering, anything but staying at home, and the home folks concentrated, or at least showed limited concern as to where the boys were after dark.

These chaps were in high school. In the old days a high school student was supposed to do some studying at home. The modern system with its "supervised study periods" has done away with that. The average high school student drops his thought of study when he leaves the building each afternoon—"sufficiently done, now for the bright lights." He would be ashamed to be caught carrying his books home. Nor is this all. Has the high school administration no responsibility over the student except when he is in the high school building? Whose business is it to know what is going on in the curtained autos parked outside

basement. Shower baths are pro-

prearrangement—"you get that article in so-and-so's window and I'll take it off your hands." Many of these articles figured as Christmas presents. Some of our dotting mothers might well question the origin of some of the expensive presents the dear daughter received from her fond sweetheart—presents, the value of which are far beyond the ability of a high school boy to purchase or the right of a high school girl to accept.

To the onlooker, it would appear that Salem, moral, complacent Salem, might pause a moment and take a look at itself.
Somebody is responsible for the conditions mentioned above. Maybe we all are.
