ed. "We urge all other bodies of Oregon, including the State Chamber of Commerce, to support the plans of the State Development board in framing future development work, and to coordinate the forces of the state along the lines recommended."

Samuel Brown of Gervais, president of the state drainage association, sat on the state development board in its recent study of the needs of agriculture and how business men can help meet them. The findings of the board emphasize the necessity of organizing the state mind for direct and concrete aid to the producer, and of giving fair publicity to the products and opportunities of the state.

"The supreme problem of the Oregon producer is marketing his crops," declares the resolution.

The Portland Chamber has undertaken to raise a $300,000 fund to help solve this and related problems, and put Oregon agriculture in the class where it belongs by using its latent resources.

Reclamation of land by drainage, irrigation, land clearing and diversification, is the production problem to be attacked.

A market system that will provide a steady outlet for surplus farm produce at reasonable profit on cost of production, is the big business end of the program being mapped for state-wide forward movement.

"This is the biggest thing business has ever started to help the farmer; let's put it over!" The quoted words are those of a private note to the editor from the department of industrial journalism of the Oregon Agricultural college, in sending the above matter in bulletin form to the press of the state. This great project has already been referred to several times in various departments of The Statesman. It should be "put over" big. And stuck to everlastingly. It promises great things for the men of Oregon who are on the land, and for every material interest of the whole state.—Ed.)

Incubator and brooder repairs and parts may be advantageously ordered now. Ordering and installing thermometers, thermostats, regulators and other necessary parts and supplies before the rush of the hatching season is time profitably spent. It may be necessary to build a few houses. Taking advantage of all good weather spells now will pay later.—O. A. C. Experiment station.

The breeders that are to produce the eggs for hatching should be getting into condition for laying in January. Some breeders use lights in January to bring them into production.—O. A. C. Experiment station.

Enough permanganate of potash crystals to cover a dime or sufficient to give the poultry drinking water a wine red color is a good preventive for colds.—O. A. C. Experiment station.

A curtain on the open front of a chicken house is good insurance, although it may never be used. If a cold spell lasting two or three days comes along frozen combs and toes may be the result. Egg production may drop off and remain low for a month or two after. It is recommended that a curtain be prepared and kept ready to cover the front of the house in case of excessive cold weather.—O. A. C. Experiment station.

Approval of the Portland Chamber of Commerce and other business organizations raising funds for developing Oregon agriculture, was given by the state drainage association at Portland December 20.

"We commend the Portland Chamber of Commerce for leading off in concrete, constructive work for the producers of this state," the drainage men declared.

WE SHOULD PRODUCE ENOUGH PEARS FOR THE CANNERIES OF THE VALLEY

"The Pear Business Is Growing Very Rapidly, and We Believe That It Deserves More Attention from the Willamette Valley Growers Than It Is Receiving," Says J. O. Holt, the Big Eugene Cannery Man.

Editor Statesman:

On account of closing up our annual business and the necessity of the writer's getting ready for an extended trip east, I will be unable to give you much information about pears.

In our section of the valley we grow about 400 tons of Bartlett pears which is just about enough to take care of our legitimate canning business. However, this is not taking into consideration the fresh fruit shipping.

We consider the pear one of our most substantial fruits. If the pears can be canned, or vice versa. In any event, each section of the country should have sufficient tonnage to be able to market some of its output in both ways. Some three or four thousand tons of pears were shipped out of southern Oregon to the canneries, while the canneries of the Willamette valley, no doubt, shipped in fully as many, if not more, principally from the Yakima section. There is no use paying freight to ship these pears around. We should produce enough in the Willamette valley to take care of our canneries, and where we have more than the canneries can take care of, other canneries should be developed, providing other conditions are favorable. The pear business is growing very rapidly, and we believe that it deserves more attention from the Willamette valley growers than it is receiving. Very truly yours,

EUGENE FRUIT GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

—J. O. Holt.

(J. O. Holt, the writer of the above letter, is one of the big canneries men of the Willamette valley. The Eugene Fruit Growers' association, of which he is the secretary-manager, has plants at Eugene, Junction City and Creswell. They have ice storage and ice cream plants at Eugene. Their brands are Perfection, Diamond "A" and Three Sisters. They are about "the whole thing" in their line in the upper end of the Willamette valley; and Mr. Holt is rated as an authority in the fruit world in general.—Ed.)

Vessel in Pacific Ocean Reported in Distress

SEATTLE, Jan. 3.—A report received at Port Angeles, Wash., this evening that a ship was in distress in the Pacific ocean off the mouth of the Hoh river, was caused by blowing of fog signals on Destruction Island, in that vicinity, Capt. S. G. Dodge, division commander of the coast guard stationed in this city, said tonight.

Captain Dodge said that the signals were at first supposed to come from a vessel without wireless, but that no vessel could be seen in the neighborhood. The coast guard cutter Maids was sent here by Captain Dodge to Port Angeles to be in readiness if it should prove that a vessel was in distress.
