HOLDING A HUSBAND REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of
CHAPTER 239
THE WONDERS THAT EDITH HAD WORKED

The Durkee home, like the one in which we lived in Marvin, is a rather ancient structure, and remains one irresistibly of Dickens' "Black House" in its unexpected passages, its steps up and down into odd little rooms and its wings, thrown out from the original main building.

It was through one of these dark passages that we followed Edith Fairfax and emerged at the rear of the house in the quarters where, in the stirring days when my father made his temporary home here, his treacherous, oriental man-servant had been lodged.

As I remember the place—when after the man's departure upon his exposure by Allen Drake we visited his quarters—the second story of the rear wing was divided into three tiny rooms, of no particular beauty or utility, by wooden partitions. These I now saw had been taken down, the three rooms thrown into one—patently the original design of the builder—and a skylight cut into the roof at one end.

The result was a really commodious studio apartment, furnished with the delightful old mahogany which I remembered seeing in the studio apartment which the Fairfax sisters had shared in the city, and to which they had brought the few rare pieces of furniture and china salvaged from the financial wreck of their father's home in Virginia.

Some one, Edith, of course, had arranged them into a marvellously close reproduction of the New York studio home. I guessed that the loving elder sister had planned this room purposely, so that if Lilla ever felt strange or homesick in her new life she would have this refuge in which to pull herself together again.

Mrs. Durkee evidently saw what I did and gave utterance to "her vision in astonished accents. "She'll Probably Need It."

"Why, it's just like your New York studio! However did you do it? I just turned the carpenters over to her," she said to us apologetically. "I was so busy in the other rooms, and I had no idea what she was fixing up in here. It's wonderful what you've accomplished, Edith. She can come back here and forget she's married."

"She'll probably need it." The caustic words leaped, I knew, without volition, from Edith Fairfax's lips, for the next instant she had camouflaged them with a laugh.

It was a sorry effort, however, and I saw little Mrs. Durkee ruffle up like an offended bantam. There still remained, however, the startled look in her eyes which had come there at Edith's behavior when the color scheme of Lilla's room was made known to her, and I knew that the little woman beneath her surface resentment was busily engaged in conjecture and in questioning her own wisdom.

She has one of the tenderest hearts in the world, this oft-times provoking little neighbor of mine, and it can be counted upon to sway her actions—unless her positively mulish obstinacy is aroused—then there is no hope of striking her from the path she has chosen. I fervently hoped there would be no further speech which might arouse her resentful obstinacy.

If was Lillian, again, who diverted all our minds by pointing a dramatic forefinger toward a large and beautifully decorated screen which stood in front of a recess in the apartment. Evidently it was a closet, the partitions of which had been torn down.

A Real Kitchennette.
"Don't tell me, Edith," she cried, "that you actually have a kitchennette up here!" Edith smiled—no one could have helped it at Lillian's tone—and walked toward the screen. "Come and see," she invited. We crowded around her, and exclaimed in wondering admiration at the stationery washstand, its porcelain spotlessly white, its faucets shining, the tiny kitchen table with electric cooking things in orderly array upon it, and a small wall cupboard, with all the requirements for exceedingly light housekeeping.

pettishly, "have the only help there is left in the world, and, to tell you the truth, I wouldn't have either one of 'em as a gift!" I guessed that Lillian was making the same strenuous effort to control her risibles at my little neighbor's felicitous thrust that was occupying my own attention. That Mrs. Durkee, though steadfastly refusing to be "bothered" with a maid, has always been childishly jealous of Katie's devotion to me, I have long known. But her catty little outburst was a distinct relief to me. I knew that into it she had thrust the irritation which might otherwise have strengthened her obstinacy concerning the decorations of Lilla's room. And I was rapidly developing what Dicky calls one of my "fool hunches" concerning her probable action in that direction.

"No, they named it after the cook, hoping she wouldn't leave."

LECTURE ON OILS BY NOTED EXPERT

What Auto Industry Is Doing to the World's Supply of Petroleum.

Salem car users had a rare privilege Friday in hearing and seeing R. F. Overlook, oil expert, in a lecture and stereopticon show at the Bligh theater. He travels partly under governmental auspices, and shows a government film in depicting the gas and lubrication business. The automotive engineering school dismissed and attended in a body, and garage men and car owners made up a good audience.

Oils From Three Bases
Lubricating oils, said this oil expert, are classed under three heads: from paraffin base crude, from mixed base crude, and from asphalt crude. Oil of the first class is found in Pennsylvania, western New York, eastern Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee. Oil from a mixed base is found in western Ohio, Iowa, Illinois, Oklahoma, northern Texas, northern Louisiana and Wyoming.

Oils from the strictly asphalt base come from lower Texas and Louisiana, Arkansas, Kansas, California and Mexico. Total oil production for the United States in 1921 was 776 million barrels or three-fourths of the world's output of petroleum. In addition 90 million barrels were imported from Mexico. Figures on the amount exported are not at hand but the demand equals production at present.

More Oil Needed
Men of foresight are almost unanimous in the opinion that in the future we will either have to import more crude oil or turn to developing our shale rock resources, of which we have many millions of tons. This shale is an oil-bearing rock which occurs chiefly in Colorado and Wyoming. The oil situation is one of national importance, for every piece of machinery depends upon lubrication for its efficiency and this is truly a mechanical age. One of the causes of Germany's downfall in the World war was her industrial breakdown, to which her lack of lubricating oil for locomotives and machinery was a contributing cause. Dispute over the possession of certain oil regions in the Near East is one of the difficulties Europe is trying to settle at present. A general impression seems to prevail that Pennsylvania does not produce enough of the paraffin base oil, but in the Appalachian range there is enough of this type of crude oil to supply the demand. At the present time Scotland depends upon its shale rock for the production of crude oil.

Gas From New Process
Through the processes of refining the gasoline used in motors is produced. There are three general classes: casing head gas, which is made from the gas from the oil well and is used for blending purposes only; straight run gas, the old fashioned or true gas, which is a mixture of all three kinds. The cracked blend gas is made from fuel oil which is broken up by heat and pressure into hydro carbon. Its chemical formula is close to that of true gas.

This cracking process led to the increased production of gas and is used by some of the larger companies who can afford to get the expensive equipment. The gasoline now sold contains about one-third of what used to be called kerosene. Before the advent of the automobile gasoline was that portion of crude oil which boiled, under 300 degrees F. Nowadays it is that portion which boils under 450 degrees F. and is a much deader gas than the former. Lowering of the quality of gas has made tremendous demands on the carburetor engineer, who has had to work overtime designing equipment to handle that type of fuel.

START POULTRY FARM
SILVERTON, Or., Feb. 17.—(Special to The Statesman.)—Mrs. Adolph Torgerson has received a shipment of White Leghorn cockerels from the Briggs Poultry Farm at Walker, Oregon. Mrs. Torgerson is a daughter of Mr. Briggs and before coming to Silvertown she managed the incubating and brooder rooms of the Briggs Poultry Farm. Mrs. Torgerson says she expects to start a strong competition with her father.

Osteopathic Board Is Approved by Senators
The senate Saturday passed Senator Robertson's bill to create a state board of osteopathic physicians which previously had been tabled. Senator Robertson contended that under the mixed board system now in vogue there is discrimination against osteopaths. Senator Smith declared that to pass the bill meant the licensing of incompetents. Senator Tooze withdrew his bill which proposed to prohibit the use of seines, traps or fish wheels for catching salmon in the waters of Oregon or waters over which the state has concurrent jurisdiction.

Mr. Potwin is vice president of the Oregon State editorial association and a former editor of the Albany Evening Herald.

Important To All Women Readers of This Paper
Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it. Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease. If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased. You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition. Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be dependent; it makes any one so. But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions. Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine will do for them. By enclosing 10 cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive sample size bottle by parcel post. You can purchase medium and large size bottles at all drug stores.—Adv.
