CROP SURVEY RESULTS OUT

Winter Wheat Decrease in Nation, But Oregon Promises Increase

PORTLAND, Or., April 18.—A decrease of about 14,000,000 bushels in the winter wheat crop of the United States for the season of 1923, as compared with the final estimate of the 1922 winter wheat crop is forecast from the April 1, 1923 condition reports, by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, says F. L. Kent, agricultural statistician for Oregon. Besides the winter wheat crop, the April report considers rye, number of breeding sows, and supply and demand for farm labor.

Winter Drainage Small.

Winter Wheat:—The Oregon fall wheat crop came through the winter with comparatively little damage. There was a very little "drowning out" in the western part of the state, and a little early spring loss in the eastern part of the state from alternate freezing and thawing causing the young plants to "heave." The most severe damage appears to have been from "blowing out" during March. A report from Umatilla county says in part: "Warm weather is making grain look much better, but two heavy wind storms have reduced the prospects materially. Probably close to twenty thousand acres blew out in the lighter land country. A good deal of this will not be re-seeded because of the high price of spring seed, the lateness of the season, and the condition of the soil."

The condition of the Oregon winter wheat crop on April 1 was placed at 91.0 per cent of normal, as compared with 90.0 per cent of one year ago, 99.0 per cent two years ago, and the ten-year average of 95.0 per cent. It is believed that revised estimates of acreage to be harvested will show about 850,000 acres for the 1923 harvest. Present indications are, therefore, for a production of about 18,275,000 bushels.

National Crop Drops.

The condition of the United States crop on April 1, 1923, is placed at 75.2 as compared with 78.4 last year, and the 10-year average of 84.1. A production of 572,317,000 bushels is forecasted as against the final estimate of 586,204,000 bushels harvested in 1922. The actual production for 1923 may be more or less than the foregoing estimate depending upon the character of the growing season.

Rye:—Condition of the Oregon rye crop on April 1, 1923, was estimated at 95.0 per cent of normal compared with 92.0 per cent a year ago, and the 10-year average of 97.0 per cent. The Oregon rye acreage is largely used for hay or pasture, hence the grain production is not large, and the percentage of the acreage threshed varies considerably from year to year.

The condition of the United States Rye crop on April 1 was estimated at 81.8 per cent compared with 89.0 per cent a year ago, and the 10-year average of 88.6 per cent. The 1923 acreage shows a considerable reduction from that of 1922, and the total production for 1922 is estimated at 75,784,000 bushels as against the final 1922 estimate of 95,497,000 bushels.

Breeding Sows:—Reports indicate a slight increase in number of breeding sows in the state as compared with a year ago, when the number was estimated at 35,000. The United States increase is estimated at 6.0 per cent increase over a year ago, making the estimated number on April 1, 1923, a total of 13,256,000 head.

Some abor Shortage.

Farm abor Supply:—Activity in the lumber industry, also considerable construction work, has absorbed the labor supply to a considerable extent. Reports received place the Oregon supply of farm labor at about 92.0 per cent of last year. For the United States the supply is estimated at 82.8 per cent of last year.

Farm abor Demand:—Here is a typical farm labor report from a western Oregon farmer: "Farm help is scarce. The wages are so high a farmer can not afford to pay them. The time has come that the farmer has to do what he can himself and let the rest go undone. There will be many acres of berries that will not be cultivated this spring, let alone being picked for want of help." Similar conditions appear to prevail over pretty much all of the United States, and the demand for the country as a whole is placed at 93.0 per cent of last year.

Weather Conditions.

Rainfall from January 1 to March 31, 1923, is reported to be 3.89 inches below the normal at the Portland, Oregon Weather Bureau station. There was much good weather for outdoor work during March in the western part of the state, and spring work is more advanced than usual. Favorable weather conditions have enabled farmers to seed about the usual acreage, even with the farm help shortage. More rainfall would be most welcome in the central and eastern portions of the state.

The earlier fruit trees are in full bloom in some districts, which means a strong probability of frost damage.

MARKET PRICES AVERAGE LOWER

Good Weather Reports Put Bulls at Disadvantage Most of Time

CHICAGO, April 18.—Notwithstanding the fact that wheat touched the season's highest price yet for July delivery, the market ruled lower the greater part of the time. The better weather conditions, together with absence of any important new export business put bulls at a disadvantage. The close was unsettled at 3-8 to 1 1-8 net decline, May $1.25 to 1.25 1-2 and July 1.23 1-8 to 1.23 1-4. Corn lost 5-8 to 1 1-8, oats 1-4 to 3-4 and provisions 7 @ 10 to 15c.

With some indications of an improved outlook both for seeding and growth, the wheat market showed a downward tendency at the opening. The fact that Liverpool quotations had made but little response to yesterday's upturn in values here was an additional bearish influence. Nevertheless, prospects of crop curtailment this year led soon to considerable speculative buying and to a price advance based also on assertions that grain values had still to be adjusted to the low purchasing power of the dollar.

Dwindling of the volume of purchase orders in the wheat market set in, however, when May and September deliveries appeared on the verge of following July to a new high price record for the season. The advance seemed to have made the market topheavy and it took but little selling pressure to send values down grade, especially in the last hour when advices from the seaboard implied that exporters were holding off and awaiting a downturn in prices.

Corn and oats were bearishly affected by the action of wheat. Liquidating sales on the part of scattered longs was evident in the corn market, despite a good feeding demand.

Provisions went lower in line with hog values.
