Error Corrected—Burton F. Marsh of Salem, supreme organizer for the western division, Improved Order of the Camels of the World, sends a letter to The Statesman requesting that this newspaper reverse a statement made in an article last Sunday in which it was stated that the Camels are "said to be an anti-prohibition organization." Mr. Marsh declares the Camels "are just the opposite along the lines of the national prohibition laws," which would indicate they are for the bone-dry regime. The basis of The Statesman's reference to anti-prohibition was this: About two years ago articles were filed at the state house by a lodge known as the Camels, in which it was frankly stated that one of the objects was opposition to prohibition. The Statesman assumed that the two organizations were one and the same. But possibly there are two Camel lodges with opposite tenets.

MASH AND WINE ARE DISCOVERED

Deputies Smith and Barber Raid Premises of Stottler and Bachelor

A young manufactory, of limited proportions but which had promises of branching into a life-sized business, was nipped in the growing stage yesterday by Deputy Sheriffs Bert Smith and Walter Barber, when they raided the premises occupied by George Stottler and Jack Bachelor about five miles south of Salem near Croisan creek late yesterday afternoon. A still and about one gallon of mash and a quart of dandelion wine were discovered in the vicinity.

Both Stottler and Bachelor were sawing wood in the vicinity of their home when the raid was made. The mash and wine were discovered immediately by the deputies. However, they were obliged to hunt several hours before the still could be found; which had been secreted in nearby brush. From all appearances the two had just started in the bootlegging business, officials stated.

In addition, bottles of pineapple and lemon extract were found on the persons of the two captives, which they had been carrying for their personal use. They are being held in the county jail and will probably be bound over to the justice court Monday morning.

It may be too late to win success and love, but it is never too late to be a man. SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS GATHER Interesting Addresses Heard Yesterday, at District Convention

A well attended session of the Methodist district Sunday school association was held Friday at the First Methodist church. It was made up from the Salem superintendency district, that covers several of the counties of the valley. Delegates were present from a number of the valley towns, including Corvallis, Woodburn, Silverton and all the towns between and within about an equal range.

An afternoon session was held, beginning at 3:30 and continuing until 6 o'clock, when dinner was served in the church parlors at almost 800 guests. Dr. Bert Smith of Portland, national Sunday school worker, was one of the speakers, and he made a tremendous hit. He had spoken earlier in the day to the students at Willamette, to the high school and to the junior high school. Services were held in the evening after the dinner, the whole evening being filled with capable addresses on various phases of Sunday school work.
