

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adela Garrison's New Phase of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

WHY DICKY REFUSED TO HEAR MAJGE'S STORY CHAPTER 299

I lay awake a long time upon that last night in my old home in Marvin. I listened to Dicky's even breathing beside me, grieving unreasonably at the irritation he had shown that evening, wondering how I was to make the opportunity in the hurry of the next morning to tell him what I thought I ought concerning my meeting with Grace Draper and her appeal to me. Not until after midnight did I finally fall asleep, and as a consequence the first thing which reached my consciousness in the morning was Katie's knock upon the door.

"Miss Graham, you wake?" she asked cautiously.

"Yes, Katie, what is it?" I demanded sleepily, while Dicky pushed his head farther into his pillow and uttered a muttered anathema upon my little maid's zeal.

"Noting, only I goin' over now to help Miss Durkee feed breakfast, so I thought I call you wance before I go, so you not sleep and Misser Graham not miss hees train."

"Thank you, Katie, we'll get up right away," I returned.

I heard her hurrying down the hall, and hoped that Dicky would not explode before she got out of earshot. If there is one thing more than another which ruffles his temper it is being awakened suddenly, and he growled his disapproval before she had reached the stairs.

"When in creation are you going to get that girl trained so she won't go screeching around the house like a carousel siren?" he demanded, but he had the grace to keep his voice at a low pitch, and I was sure Katie didn't hear him.

I knew better than to make any defence of Katie. I was sentimental enough to wish no unpleasant memories of this our last morning together in our old home, but I saw that Dicky apparently had no consciousness of its differing from any other morning, and I was too proud to remind him of its special significance. I realized also that I must watch my step carefully or I would have one of his outbursts of hot temper as a last remembrance of the Marvin home.

Dicky Is Querulous.

"I'm sorry she woke you so suddenly," I said, getting out of bed and slipping into my bathrobe and mules. "Do you want your shower first or shall I take mine?" I think you have time for a tiny cat nap if you want it. You dress so much more quickly than I can."

It costs no more to buy a KELLY

THERE is little to say about a tire that tire advertisements have not already said.

After all, it's performance, not promises, that counts. On thousands of cars Kelly Cords are telling their own story, and telling it more convincingly than any advertisement could because they speak in terms of mileage, service and safety.

"Oh, take yours first if you want to!" he replied grudgingly. "But if you think anybody can take another nap after that Comanche yell you're wozy. However, I'd like a chance to stretch some of the kinks out so run along."

I looked at my watch, decided that I could let him sleep for ten minutes longer, and hastily dressed in the warm clothing which I had selected for driving. At the end of the ten minutes I called him softly, touching him gently that he might not be startled.

"Eh! What?" he exclaimed, started at seeing me fully dressed, and leaped out of bed, his eyes and face as gray as lead.

"If you've let me oversleep so that I miss my train!" he growled unreasonably.

No Time.

"But I haven't," I said lightly, determined to keep my poise and good nature no matter what provocation he gave me. "You've only slept about fifteen minutes, and you have plenty of time."

"Well, don't get in my way then!" he said ungraciously, and I slipped quietly into the alcove of my room, sat down by the window and waited, pondering how best I could introduce the subject of meeting Grace Draper. I dreaded upsetting him, and I had not the slightest idea whether he would be angry or pleased at the attitude I had taken toward her.

I said no word, however, until he had taken his shower and finished his dressing. Then, as he turned from the mirror after a last approving survey of the twist he had achieved upon his tie I spoke hesitatingly:

"Dicky, there is something I want to tell you if you can give me a minute or two."

"Do you need money?" he countered. "I sent a big draft to your bank yesterday, but I have some ready cash with me if you want it."

"No, I have plenty," I returned. "I don't want to carry too much with me. But I want to tell you—"

He looked at his watch impatiently.

"Look here!" he demanded irritably. "Is it any matter of life and death that it can't wait a few days until I see you again? You're not going to fall off the face of the earth because you're going out to the east end of the island to hunt a home. Neither am I. And I think it entirely likely that I'll be out there, or you here at Mrs. Durkee's in the course of a week or two. So why spoil a perfectly good morning?"

I gave a little mental whoop of approval. My conscience need not trouble me longer. Dicky himself had put it out of my power to tell him anything about Grace Draper.

STOCKS MAKE A QUICK RECOVERY

Overselling Established as Definite Cause of Bear Trader Attack.

NEW YORK, May 9.—Stock prices, which had been hammered almost incessantly by bear traders during the last 10 days, made a quick and impressive recovery in today's market, confirming the general impression that the market had been over sold. While the rebound was undoubtedly due to technical conditions within the market, Secretary Hoover's speech predicting continued prosperity and another new high record of car loadings for this season of the year, had a cheerful effect on sentiment. Short covering operations, induced by the relatively small floating supply of stock available for loaning purposes, provided the impetus for the advance but there were further indications of buying by strong interests and an increasing public demand for the standard issues, although this outside participation is not yet heavy enough to materially influence the price movement.

Marked weakness of demand sterling, which fell below $4.60 for the first time this year, brot about sympathetic declines in the other principal foreign exchange rates and in the price of foreign bonds, but it was without effect in the other securities and commodity markets.

Heavy offerings of bills here were responsible for one cent drop in the sterling rate. French francs dropped four points to below 6.50 cents.

Rail shares were heavily bought.

Call money opened at 4 3-4 per cent, but eased off to 4 1-2 during the non hour, closing at that figure. Trading in the time money market was quiet with loans arranged at 5 1-4 per cent for the shorter maturities. The commercial paper rates were unchanged, prime names still commanding 5 and 5 1-4 per cent.

Frost and Low Temperature Reports Have Some Effect on Market

CHICAGO, May 9.—Moderate returns in the price of wheat resulted today from buying based in part on opinions that frost and low temperatures were likely to have an unfavorable effect on winter wheat and on the spring crop as well. The market closed firm, 1-2 to 3-4 cents net higher, with July 1.17 7-8 to 1.18 and September 1.16 1-2. Corn finished 5-8 to 1 1-4 cents up. Oats gained 3-8 to 1-2c and provisions 15 to 22c at 25c.

It was a generally accepted view that although the cold wave would be without any immediate serious consequence as to winter wheat, the ultimate probable effect would be to a considerable extent adverse because of delay to plant progress. The significant fact in this connection according to a statement issued by a leading expert was that the winter crop is already late and especially in the Ohio valley is lacking in vitality. Further interference with spring wheat was also held to be serious and it was said the germination of a large per centage that is seeded but is still unspouted would likewise be hindered.

Evidence that wheat bulls had regained some confidence was particularly noticeable near the end of the day. Bearish aspects of the government crop report tended to check buying at the outset but were later almost lost sight of. On the other hand chattering of vessel room for the shipment of a cargo of wheat from here to Buffalo counted as something of a stimulus, and so too, did gossip that virtually all the wheat in Omaha had been acquired for export.

Continued liberal shipments of corn out of Chicago gave strength to corn and oats.

Notwithstanding that today's hog market was at about the lowest price level of the season, demand for provisions was good and the provision market went higher with grain.
