

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Revelations of a Wife

CHAPTER 308

WHAT LILLIAN DID, AND SEEMED THOROUGHLY TO ENJOY

The young motorcycle officer to whom Lillian had just revealed her identity had a touch of the theatrical about him. There was no doubt about that, or the fact that he was reveling in the unexpected dramatic situation into which he had been thrust. As the arrogant owner of the big car finished spluttering his denial that he had any contraband liquor concealed in his automobile, the young official, but up his hand authoritatively, only waiting for Lillian's little comment before speaking.

"No, doubt everything is as you assert it," he said atry, evidently trying to be extra legal in his choice of words, "but it will do no hurt to take a look into the car, as this lady directs. So please come along."

He walked toward his motorcycle while the face of the owner of the car lost its high color. He stood irresolute for a moment, then turned to his son.

"This is an Awful Mess."

"Ted!" he called, and there was in his voice a note of appeal which I fancied the youth never had heard before from his arrogant father. That the young college student had always been treated as a petted but tyrannical small boy I had guessed, and I wondered if this sudden "putting in a corner" of which Lillian had spoken presaged a different paternal attitude.

Ted came forward eagerly, in his face all the ardent welcome which youth generally gives to its first responsibility.

"Yes, dad," he said quietly, putting his hand upon his father's shoulder.

The older man hesitated for a minute, and I fancied that in his face there was a recognition of the fact that for the rest of his life he was to learn more and more upon the staid, clean-cut son. At any rate, his voice was so subdued when he spoke that I hardly recognized it.

"Teddy," he said, going back involuntarily to the name he must have called the boy when he was a child, "this is an awful mess. I don't know what your grandmother will say. I suppose I have made a terrible mistake, and I—I wish you'd see what you can do. If the lady wishes an apology—"

"A Grateful 'Ted.'"

"I want nothing," Lillian interrupted, crisply, "except the assurance your own behavior has just given me that you will probably stop, look and listen at the next crossroads between common decency and your own arrogance. The world has been your oyster for so long that you have almost forgotten any one except you has any rights in it. Frankly, I would follow this thing to its logical conclusion, except for the fact that your son does not deserve the pain which would follow any humiliation to you. How you have managed to turn out a chap like that is a mystery to me. Take my advice, and let him run things a bit. And—the incident is closed as far as I am concerned. Officer! A word if you please."

The young motorcycle officer, who had stood with one hand upon his machine during the colloquy, left it abruptly and hurried to Lillian's side. She hesitated for an instant before she addressed him, and I thought whimsically that she was not absolutely immune from feminine weakness, for I suspected that she was making as effective as possible her dominance of the situation.

"You will let these people proceed without hindrance," she said meagerly.

"Very well, madam," he replied, and I repressed a giggle with difficulty, for he made the response in so staid a manner that it smacked strongly of the "Aye, yes, sir," of the old naval melodramas.

Lillian turned indifferently away, and in an instant the air was filled with the noise of the popping motorcycle and the quivering hum of the powerful engine, which Jones started at a signal from Ted. The elder man with a last half-apologetic, half-malevolent glance at Lillian, climbed heavily into the founess and looked expectantly at Ted.

"Go on, Jones," the younger

Each State Has Individual Shimmy Style

The big car followed the spluttering motorcycle down the winding road, and Ted strode over to Lillian, his face a curious mixture of smiling gratitude and wonderment.

"I'll never stop being grateful to you for what you've done for me today," he said, "nor quit wondering just how you did it." (To Be Continued)

The Thursday club, a group of prominent Salem matrons, will be guests of Mrs. E. C. Cross this week for the May time meeting. Joint hostesses for the afternoon will be Mrs. Russel Catlin and Mrs. Henry B. Thielson.

Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Kay returned Monday from several weeks' trip to southern California. Mrs. J. D. Southerland accompanied them home.

The Eastern Star sponsored a large bridge and five hundred party yesterday at the Masonic Temple. Scotch Broom made a delightfully colorful setting for the card tables and the dining room was bright with California poppies and bachelor buttons.

Mrs. C. A. Vibbert won high score at bridge and the five hundred prize went to Mrs. Curran, of Wis., a guest in town.

Presiding at the tea table were Mrs. George H. Burnett and Mrs. H. A. Cupper. Hostesses for the afternoon who assisted at the dining room were rs. I. L. Darby, rs. R. F. Dillen, Mrs. Charles Elgin, Mrs. Herbert Hauser, Mrs. James Nichols, Miss George King, Mrs. Mrs. Ella M. PaPrvine, Mrs.

Montana Physicians Unable to Determine How Griffith Met His Death

R. E. Mantor, deputy warden of the state penitentiary, returned yesterday with the body of George Griffith, convict who escaped from Mantor by leaping from a moving train near Forsythe, Mont. and whose corpse was found in the Yellowstone river two days later. The body will be cremated at the state incinerator.

Griffith, while serving an 18-months term in the state prison for larceny in Multnomah county, escaped 12 years ago when he had only nine months more to serve. He never was heard from until three weeks ago when he was picked up in Chicago and identified by Chicago police from descriptions in the rogues' gallery. Mantor was sent to bring Griffith back to Salem.

Vincent Lopez Discovers Forty-eight Varieties of Shakers to His Tunes

"It's one of those nut melodies that really take people out of themselves and into the spirit of the dance, so that I can do the detective to my heart's content."

IDENTIFICATIONS ACCURATE
"There's a gallantry about Georgia, a loose expansiveness about Texas, a dash about California, and a touch of sophisticated boredom about New York."

"As for Missouri, you ought to see the way they pound out the measures! Ohio's harder to spot, but a peculiar in-toeing usually gives 'em away. Iowa toes out more and Montana always prances at the end."

Mr. Lopez checks up his classifications by the hotel register sometimes just for fun and finds his method so accurate he declares he'll open a mail order course in identification.

NEW CORPORATIONS
Articles of incorporation were filed yesterday by the Umqua Valley Broccoli growers of Roseburg, capitalized at $5000. The incorporators are C. E. Marks, R. H. C. Wood, Elvin Cloake, S. D. Cooley and Fred M. Curtis.

Notice of dissolution was filed by the Warrenton-Astoria Townsite company.

The aid society of the WRC will hold an all day session Thursday at the armory.

Miss Anna E. Karagozian of Portland, senior student in Social Service, also of the School of Journalism of U. of O. is the guest, while in Salem, of Edna Garfield.

MANTOR RETURNS WITH MAN'S BODY

Montana Physicians Unable to Determine How Griffith Met His Death

R. E. Mantor, deputy warden of the state penitentiary, returned yesterday with the body of George Griffith, convict who escaped from Mantor by leaping from a moving train near Forsythe, Mont. and whose corpse was found in the Yellowstone river two days later. The body will be cremated at the state incinerator.

Griffith, while serving an 18-months term in the state prison for larceny in Multnomah county, escaped 12 years ago when he had only nine months more to serve. He never was heard from until three weeks ago when he was picked up in Chicago and identified by Chicago police from descriptions in the rogues' gallery. Mantor was sent to bring Griffith back to Salem.

Mantor says that he and the prisoner had a compartment on the train. While a porter was making up the beds in the compartment on the evening of May 17, Mantor and the prisoner went into the wash room of another car. The prisoner suddenly rushed into the toilet and slammed and locked the door. Mantor called a porter, but when they unlocked the door found the window open and the prisoner was gone. The train stopped five minutes later at Forsythe and Mantor procured the aid of officers there and Griffith was followed. He was not seen until his body was found, one hand protruding from the water near the bank of the river.

A coroner's inquest failed to determine the cause of Griffith's death. There was not water in the lungs, indicating that he had not died by drowning. The condition of the body indicated that he may have died of convulsions. The skull was not fractured, as once reported. The body was found at 11:30 on the night of May 19.
