FROM BREAD TO BRIDGE

Mother Used to Stay Home, Now Buys Her Bread and Goes to the Club
By M. L. PULCHER
Vice president and general manager, Federal Motor Truck company.
On Tuesdays and Fridays as regular as the calendar—Mother used to bake a "batch" of bread. She had to for a hungry circle of mouths gathered round the table three times a day—and the only source of bread was Mother's flour bin and the kitchen range.
All of us can remember that Mother didn't go out often. If she attended a sewing circle once a week, the family thought Mother was neglecting them—for on that day something good was missing from the menu. She couldn't step to the phone and order a lot of good things. They didn't have the tarts and pastries, cakes and cookies for sale—because they couldn't deliver them fresh made.
Mother's time was wholly ours—she sacrificed her entire day and sometimes part of the night to our comfort—in those days which we can all remember.
But how different it all is today. There has been an emancipation of home drudgery. The Mothers of today are out every afternoon—a luncheon—or a bridge party—a church benefit—a club program—and in spite of her arrival home, oftentimes after we get there, we have plenty to eat—more variety in fact than when Mother slaved over the hot stoves.
It is distribution and volume production, made possible by the extra 15 or 20 miles per hour that the motor truck added to delivery speed that has wrought this great change in living. The age old institution of home baking is only one of the many things of yesterday which the motor truck and its faster transportation have changed.
We are just as happy—eat as much or more. And Mother lives her own life with less drudgery and more pleasure. She has come up from "bread to bridge" because of fast motor truck delivery.

Indeed, I am not sure that she did not mean to do that very thing, for her hand had flashed upward to her face when Dr. Pettit's grave voice behind us startled us both into frightened attention.
For myself, I was panic-stricken. Had he overheard us discussing him? I was suddenly furious with Miss Foster for having dragged me into this situation by her curiosity.
Dr. Pettit has a poker face, however. If he had overheard Miss Foster's question and my answer he gave no indication of it in his manner, which was strictly professional.
"Mrs. Graham," he said, as formally as if I were a nurse assisting him in a difficult operation, "the patient will stay here for the night, as will the child. The husband will be arranged for at the police station."
What Madge Wondered.
"I knew you meant to throw a scare into him, doctor," Miss Foster interrupted. "Bully for you!"
He frowned involuntarily, as unconsciously he lifted his eyebrows, and, knowing his intense consciousness of his own dignity, I realized how the girl's interruption must have shocked and annoyed him. Then into his eyes crept smiling, tender admiration of Miss Foster's charming, impulsive naivete, which I knew was as genuine as it was unwilling.
I found myself suddenly hoping that no romantic attachment might develop between these two people so totally unsuited to each other, for the young girl's flamboyant volubility and the man's sombre, stiff dignity could not help but clash intolerably. Only a great and lasting love could conquer such incompatibility of temperament. I doubted whether either were capable of inspiring such a passion in the other.
Miss Foster was as oblivious of the smile as of the frown. She apparently cared no whit what impression she made if only she were permitted to say anything she chose at any time, no matter how inopportune.
"Are you going to operate, doctor?" she queried without giving him a chance to reply to her laudatory comment. "Is there wound a serious one, skull broken or anything like that?"
Miss Foster Apologizes.
"There is no fracture," the physician replied, a bit stiffly, "but I shall have to take several stitches in her scalp. They are preparing for it now, and I shall not be ready to leave here for some time. I would suggest that Mrs. Graham and you get something to eat while you wait—there are several good restaurants in Southampton—for I must ask you to rush back with me as soon as I have finished here. I have a critical case of pneumonia in Sag Harbor which I must see as soon as possible.
"I am sorry to trouble you so much, Mrs. Graham," he turned to me. "Believe me, I am most grateful for your kindness, and especially for the skillful care with which you drove over here. Now, if you will excuse me I will send some one out to stay with the child. She is asleep? That is good."
He turned and walked swiftly toward the hospital. But Miss Foster was not to be dismissed so cavalierly. She ran after him, and put a restraining hand upon his arm.
"But when will you eat?" she demanded.
"Tonight, sometime. I cannot stop anywhere until after I have seen my pneumonia patient."
"Well, then, I can stand it if you can!" she returned mutinously. "Besides, I'm not going to take a chance on that child's waking up with anybody else when she's used to me. So you don't need to send any stiff, starched nurse out at all, not till you're ready to go home."
Again the tender admiring look flashed across the physician's face. He murmured something in so low a voice that I could not catch it, but which was evidently intensely personal, for when Miss Foster turned back to me her charming face held a heightened color.
"Please forgive me, Mrs. Graham," she said. "I didn't think of you when I refused to go for something to eat. Perhaps you are hungry."
"Not a bit." I returned promptly. "I had just finished a most toothsome supper when the cries of the woman brought us out into the yard."
"Then, that's all right," she said relievedly. "But to tell you the honest truth, I wouldn't leave that poor little thing even if you were hungry—and from what little I've seen of you, I don't believe you would, either."
My heart went out to her at the apology, so frank yet defiant. Despite her erudition, her youthful egotism I decided that Miss Foster was a young woman distinctly worth knowing.
