OREGON THE LEADING HOP STATE

Oregon is again the leading hop state in the Union.

She was second, with California in the lead, for a couple of years—

But Oregon is again in the lead, and will perhaps stay in first place—

Partly because the quality here is high, and a certain Oregon tonnage is needed in foreign trade; partly because the growing of hops here is largely in strong hands.

So California and Washington acreage may dwindle, and leave the field to the Salem district—

For some hops will always be grown, for yeast, near beer, and the drug trade.

Also, Salem ought to have kraut factories, and a big cabbage industry.

DID YOU KNOW That for many years Salem has been the greatest hop buying center from first hands in the world; that Oregon is the greatest hop growing state in the Union; that the industry will likely persist in the Willamette valley, owing to the fact that there is grown here a superior hop, for which there is a demand from foreign buyers; that at the prices that formerly prevailed few things that can be grown on the land are as profitable—and did you know that this a great cabbage country, and ought to have a big cabbage industry, with kraut factories?

"THE EDGEBROOK," A NEWLY PLANNED HOME THAT WILL INTEREST SALEMITES

Hollow Tile Construction That Makes This a Distinctive Dwelling, and It Is Fire-Safe and Comfortable, and the Arrangement Is Up to Date—Plans May Be Seen Here at Home

"The Edgebrook," with its charmingly conceived design and pleasing proportions, and its thoughtful provisions for comfort and convenience in interior arrangement, is a thoroughly desirable home in every way. Its appearance is distinctive, and it will proclaim its individuality regardless of adjacent houses of larger and more pretentious design. The low, spacious terrace, covered at one end by a pergola, the arched entrance hood, and the judicious placing of flower boxes create an unusually inviting architectural effect. While very artistic, "The Edgebrook" presents a very substantial appearance. And its construction is just as substantial. The foundation wall is a 12-inch hollow tile wall, which will give an ideal basement that is absolutely damp-proof and snug, and the walls of the house proper are constructed of 8-inch hollow tile.

The floor plans admirably provide every comfort and convenience for the average size family.

The outer surface of the house is faced with stucco. Economical in Long Run This produces a wonderful home that is comfortable and healthful, thanks to the sealed air cells which keep out the summer heat, and the winter's cold and dampness. Added to this, it is fire-proof and permanent, because the burned clay tile defy time and fire. It is economical to build. The tile, themselves, actually cost

The bedroom on the first floor is convenient to the living room, being connected with it by a small hallway which is also of use for the connection with the upper floor. The upper floor provides for two large bedrooms, a storage room, a bath and a sleeping porch. All the bedrooms are provided with large convenient closets.

You May See Plans Any one interested in this plan may secure a blue print by writing to "The Permanent Builder," 133 West Washington street, Chicago, Illinois, remitting 35c and ask for the copy of their magazine containing the blue prints and description of "The Edgebrook." The Salem Brick & Tile company, of Salem, is interested in permanent construction of home building, and is a subscriber for this magazine. The officers of this company have expressed their desire and willingness to show these plans to any one who may be interested. Local architects could very easily make any changes in the plans that one might wish and supervise the construction. Should anyone desire to make use of these plans, the officers of the Salem Brick & Tile company have assured us that they would be happy to loan them to your architect for this purpose.

WILLIAM BELL SAYS OUR HOP INDUSTRY IS IN A MOST CRITICAL CONDITION NOW

He Says the One and Only Hope for the Survival of This Great Industry is the Amending of the Volstead Act By Congress, Allowing the Manufacturing of Beer

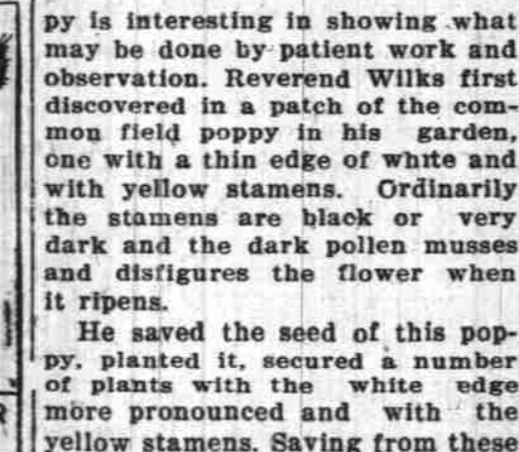

Editor Statesman: The hop industry in the Willamette valley, for which Salem has been headquarters for so many years, is now in its most critical condition for many years past. For a twenty year period hop growing has brought more money into Salem than all the other farm industries combined. With the advent of prohibition the industry suffered a relapse from which it made a temporary but vigorous recovery as a result of the war.

Now with the re-establishment of the European hop growing districts, the dwindling demand for hops in the United States, and the drop in beer consumption in England as a result of the troublesome labor situation, the world production of hops exceeds the demand. Last year the Willamette valley hop growers who were not fortunate enough to have held over term contracts did not realize the cost of production for their crops. The same situation will probably hold on this year's crop; and if it does we will again see a big reduction in acreage, and probably the final passing of an industry from the Willamette valley which pays out more in wages per acre by far than any other farm industry, and which has brought millions of dollars of foreign capital into Salem and vicinity.

The one and only hope for the survival of this great industry is the amending of the Volstead act by congress. By this is not meant a repeal of the 18th amendment, but simply a qualification of the Volstead act to permit the manufacture of beer. The hop trade, the barley trade and all the allied trades are strongly behind the movement to make this change, but are not advocating the return of the saloon; but just removal of the narrow-minded radicalism of the Volstead act.

—WILLIAM BELL, Salem, Or., June 19, 1923. (Mr. Bell is secretary of the Seavy-Bell Hop company, with offices in the Oregon building in Salem. This company has a large business in the buying of hops, on foreign and domestic account, and the members of the company are also extensive growers of hops in the Salem district.—Ed.) The Fascisti are still keeping their black shirts on.

The HOME GARDEN

SHIRLEY POPPIES, OFFICIAL FLOWER OF THE AMERICAN LEGION. The death of Rev. W. Wilks, secretary of the Royal Horticultural society of England on March 2, at his home, Shirley, recalls the debt that gardeners owe to this English clergyman, particularly in one of the handsomest of summer annuals, the Shirley poppy, named for the parish in which he lived for many years. These poppies may be sown at any time up to the middle of July with a certainty of a brilliant display of bloom, being one of the quickest of the annual flowers to come into bloom. The history of the Shirley poppy is interesting in showing what may be done by patient work and observation. Reverend Wilks first discovered in a patch of the common field poppy in his garden, one with a thin edge of white and with yellow stamens. Ordinarily the stamens are black or very dark and the dark pollen musses and disfigures the flower when it ripens. He saved the seed of this poppy, planted it, secured a number of plants with the white edge more pronounced and with the yellow stamens. Saving from these types and discarding the black-centered plants he developed the present Shirley poppy with its delicate satiny pinks and roses and even mauve and lavender shades and all with the light centers. It required a number of years and careful selection before the dark-stemmed varieties were eliminated and the strain fixed, but now a packet of Shirley poppy seed comes true.

The Shirley poppies are particularly fine cut flowers if handled properly, but there is a trick in it. They must be cut before the hairy bud expands, just as the two-valved green covering splits and shows the color. The buds are bent and pointed downward until ready to bloom, when they straighten up. It is best to cut them in the evening or early morning. Gently peel off the green covering and the bloom will expand in water and will keep well.

The latest development sent out by Reverend Wilks is a very robust strain of foxglove, known as the Shirley strain, the plants, according to English description, attaining a height of six feet, with blossoms of fine size and handsomely spotted on white, cream, rose and crimson grounds. This type has not yet been offered in the United States.

Many other garden flowers were much improved by Wilks, but the Shirley poppies will be his most enduring memorial in the garden. Four Annual Vines Four of the most useful of annual vines may be sown now, the Japanese morning glories, cardinal climber, cypress vine and flowering beans. All of these vines need fairly warm weather for successful germination and nothing is gained by sowing them outdoors while the weather is still inclined to be raw and the soil cold. The seeds are likely to rot under such conditions.

The common annual morning glories, however, are not so delicate and of the four vines mentioned, the Japanese morning glories are least likely to be injured, but their germination will be delayed to warmer weather. Cardinal climber may be planted outside as soon as the weather is reliably warm. This beautiful vine, a hybrid between the cypress vine and a close relative of the morning glory is rather slow to germinate and it is well to soak the seed in warm weather for 24 hours before planting or to file one side of the seed thin. Russell Catlin Sees the End of Growing as Far as He Is Concerned

Russell Catlin cheerfully granted an interview to the Slogan writer of The Statesman yesterday on the hop industry. But he did not give a cheerful picture of the future of the industry. Mr. Catlin has been growing and dealing in hops for many years. In partnership with Jim Linn, he was a large factor in the industry in the old days. Mr. Linn still grows and buys some hops, and he is more cheerful about the outlook. Mr. Catlin would still no doubt buy your hops, if you insisted upon it. But he does not expect to take much of a part in that branch of the industry hereafter.

CARDINAL CLIMBER

And as to growing, he has only 12 acres in cultivation this year, to fill a contract. This contract will last till next year, and so Mr. Catlin expects to grow that acreage again in 1924; but after that he expects to be out of it altogether. Old Days and Now Mr. Catlin estimated that Oregon produced about 52,000 bales of hops last year, against 164,000 bales one season nine or ten years ago. He said there are numerous contracts held by Salem dealers and growers that have been running mostly for three years, and that have this year and next to run, at 25 and 30 cents a pound. Some of the growers expect to be able to renew their contracts, and to remain in the industry. But Mr. Linn is not counting on this, for himself. He said 14 cents is the highest offer he has heard of lately, on
