

Governor Moore Invited To Join Party From Oregon
Governor Moore of Idaho is invited to join a party from Oregon that will inspect the Jordan Valley and the North Side irrigation districts. The party from this state will leave Portland July 8. In the party will be Governor Pierce, Frank C. Bramwell, state superintendent of banks; Percy

A. Cupper, state engineer; members of the irrigation advisory board, representatives of the state highway commission, representatives of Portland bonding houses, and also newspapermen.

The party will arrive at Boise at 11 a. m. Monday, July 9, and plans to arrive at Jordan Valley Monday afternoon, stopping there Monday night. They will leave Jordan Valley early Tuesday morning for an inspection of both the Jordan Valley and the North Side projects, going by the south side along the feeder canal to the Antelope reservoir, through the Antelope unit down the south side over the lower unit, back to Danner and cross over to the north side. They will inspect the lower unit diversion dam and the constructed canals and lands of the North Side district and return to Jordan Valley. The Warm Springs project will also be visited on the trip.

BLIGH
Irving Bacheller's "The Light in the Clearing" "Miracles of the Jungle"

One of the most popular and talented of juvenile heavy actors commonly termed "villians," is George Hackathorne, who plays a prominent part in T. Hayes Hunter's production of Irving Bacheller's "The Light in the Clearing" which is being released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, Bligh theatre on today.

Mr. Hackathorne's appearance off the screen implies anything but the villain, but he is invariably cast in unsympathetic roles.

Mr. Hackathorne spends all his spare time—which is very little, because he is in constant demand—trying to convince the directors that he would make a better hero than a villain, but his arguments are in vain, and he is destined to make his fame and fortune in portrayals such as the one in "The Light in the Clearing."

Bringing paintings to life!

That is the feat Herbert Brenon accomplished in filming "The Rustle of Silk," his initial Paramount picture featuring Betty Compson and Conway Tearle, which comes to the Oregon theater tonight.

The producer wished to introduce a small historical retrospect into the action. For this purpose he chose two of the loveliest of Fragonard's Louis XV paintings and literally brought them to life on the screen.

One of these paintings shows a beauty of the period reclining in a swing in an exquisite garden of that day; the second is called "La Lecture," and pictures a young gallant of the day reading to the lady of his heart.

Brenon and his scenarists developed a small play-within-a-play from these two paintings, with Betty Compson and Conway Tearle in the chief roles. Every detail of both pictures was exactly reproduced before the camera, including the formal garden and the lavish costumes.

To carry out the illusion of bringing the paintings to life, the cameraman resorted to an intricate photographic process, whereby the spectator first sees the original painting, and then this dissolves into the same picture peopled with the actors, but retaining the frame which encircled the original painting. The entire effect is of the people of the picture coming to life and moving about on the screen.

"The Rustle of Silk" is the story of a humble daughter of the people who falls in love with a great statesman, who subsequently becomes prime minister of England. The girl is the great-granddaughter of a French noblewoman, and Brenon's historical out-backs not only add to the beauty of the picture, but are of dramatic value to the finished photograph.

We feel confident that at no time in the past has there been shown in the city of Salem a more timely or fascinating film than "Night Life in Hollywood," which opened yesterday at the Liberty theatre for a two days' engagement. It deals truthfully and forcefully with a condition which has occupied column after column of space in the newspapers, and is a true exposition of the real life of those much maligned individuals, the motion picture players.

The story moves at a rapid pace from start to finish, and is perfectly enacted by a carefully chosen corps of players. Wallace Reid, Theodore Roberts, Bryant Washburn, J. Warren Kerrigan, William Desmond, Sessue Hayakawa, Tsuru Aoki, and many other of the screen's leading lights take part in the unfolding of this gripping drama of home keeping hearts and wandering sons.

We cannot say too much for such a production as this which, fearless and unafraid, throws the fierce white light of publicity on a much discussed condition. We do not for an instant hesitate in recommending "Night Life in Hollywood" to the attention of every man, woman and child in Salem.

EDITORIALS OF THE PEOPLE

The Santiam River Highway
Editor Statesman:

Leading out from the wide, flower-bordered streets of the fair Capital City over the attractive grounds of the state institutions, through many towns and hamlets from Turner to Detroit with much of interest and charm all along the ascent so gradual you would not realize the up-grade but for the merry note of the rapid river at your side, the nature-lover will note a pretty bit after passing Stayton, the entire face of a high bluff draped in the dainty greenery of young fir growth. At Niagara the Santiam flows through a rock walled space about six feet wide, affording a power sufficient to take our railroad train over and back.

At Detroit the Santiam, still a considerable stream, is spanned by a swinging bridge leading into a pretty natural park. Twelve miles from Detroit are the Brightenush springs, the fame of whose wondrous healing waters is already nation-wide. Twelve miles from the springs is Jefferson park, 6000 feet above the sea. No descriptive mention can approach the beauty and grandeur of this charming spot, which in all Oregon is without a peer. From Detroit, following the Minto trail some 20 odd miles only brings us to that gem of the mountains, Marion lake, and soon we are skirting along the base of that most oddly featured mountain, Three-Fingered Jack, upon whose smoothly fashioned brow the falling snowflake finds no nesting place, and how a short journey along the way that Peter Skene Ogden came over in 1826 and we are within the portal of the great inland empire.

Speed the day when there shall be an open thoroughfare through this low pass.

MANY TOWNS TO CELEBRATE 4TH

Marion and Polk Counties to Be Well Supplied With Entertainment

Five Marion and Polk county towns are to hold Fourth of July celebrations next Wednesday. Four of these are the old fashioned oratorical, political tail twisting, fire-cracker, horse-bucking celebrations that make the hot and cold chills run up and down the spine like rabbits in a hollow log and a ferret after them. In all these places—Monitor, Silverton, Marion, and Dallas in Polk county—shade is available, and everything to make a celebration a delight.

The Salem celebration takes the form of the big auto race program at the state fair grounds in the afternoon. It would be possible to drive to any of the other celebration towns, and get back in time for the big gas events in Salem. From present indications the attendance here will break all records. The car and driver entries insure going fast enough to make it a stand-up event.

While no official action has been taken regarding the closing of stores on the Fourth, it is very doubtful whether in all Salem one can buy anything bigger than a holiday root beer or a dinner. Plain merchandise is expected to be wiped off the map for the day. Judge Peter D'Arcy of Salem has been invited to deliver the patriotic address for the Monitor celebration. Governor Pierce is to attend the President Harding celebration at the opening of the Old Oregon trail at Meacham.

Hawley Will Speak at Park Church Services

Sunday afternoon, July 1, is the time set for the first open air union church service at Willson park, under the auspices of the Salem YMCA. This is the third year that these services have been held, covering the months of July and August. They substitute for the night services in such of the city churches as desire to take this semi-vacation for the two hottest months.

For the opening service the boys' band from the state training school will render a concert, mostly of sacred music, beginning at 3:15.

At 4 o'clock Paul Wallace, chairman for the day, will take charge of the service. Congressman Willis C. Hawley, who is staying in his Salem home for the summer, is to be the principal speaker. The song leader has not yet been selected.

The attendance and interest in the park services has grown from the start. Last year it ran up as high as 600 or more people at a time. It is believed that the attendance this year will be larger than ever before.

Coos County Loggers Will Celebrate Week, July 4th

MARSHFIELD, Ore., June 28.—Logging camps throughout Coos county will close for the Fourth of July week, remaining out of operation for six days. Most of the mills are closing only for the third and fourth. Vender factories are closing generally for only the third and fourth.
