Four acts vaudeville, and Big Bill Fairbanks in "The Western Demon."

Big Bill Fairbanks in one of his typical western dramas entitled "The Western Demon" will be the feature picture at the Bligh theater today and tomorrow.

A new four-act vaudeville road show opens at the Bligh theater today for a two days' showing.

Mobilization of the biggest army ever organized for motion picture purposes took place in Hollywood, Cal., for Metro's colossal Rex Ingram production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vincente Blasco Ibañez, now at the Grand theater. This army differed from others that have been used in movie battles for the screen in that every officer and private enlisted in its new service abroad.

"We were enabled to put on a more authentic reproduction of the second battle of the Marne than ever before has been attempted in battle pictures," said Director Ingram. "Some of the men participated in the battle that proved the turning point of the war."

"Incidentally, it was unnecessary to give these men the drilling that usually is required to prepare a raw recruit for the most unimportant part before the camera. They were able to take military orders and they were amenable to discipline. The satisfactory result of our immense military organization work was due to the aid given us by the corps of experts we used in this connection."

June Mathis, who prepared the picture version of Ibañez's sensational book, made repeated visits to the Metro ranch outside of Los Angeles, where a French village was reproduced as a background for the battle scenes.

"The Little Church Around the Corner," coming to the Oregon theater on Tuesday is a screen adaptation from the well-known stage play of Charles Blaney. Clair Windsor has the feature role and heads an all-star cast.

The making of this picture by Warner Brothers was done on a stupendous scale and involved a great expense of money. A mine was specially constructed at a cost of $25,000, an exact reproduction of a Pennsylvania mine; so realistically was it reproduced that it is said to deceive even the practiced eye of mine engineers. It is a workable mine save for the fact that no coal beds are to be found in Hollywood, lot adjoining the studio where the scenes were taken.

"The Little Church Around the Corner" is the story of David Graham, who ministers to the poor, and the girl he loves, Lella Morton. Lella is the daughter of a millionaire mine owner who refuses to improve the conditions of the workers. David is thrown into a quandary, being tempted by his rich associations to renounce the poor, to whom his heart is bound. A great strike, and a mob in an ugly mood, bring on a dramatic climax; so does an odd coincidence, by which David is arrested for the murder of a man who was Lella's suitor.

It is a picture in which "the course of true love never runs smooth." Claire Windsor's supporting cast includes Kenneth Harlan, Hobart Bosworth, Walter Long, Alec Frapets, Pauline Stark George Cooper, Margaret Seddon, William Hall, and Cyril Chadwick. William Seltzer directed.

Douglas MacLean who is starred in Thomas Ince's new comedy "The Sunshine Trail" claims that he has been to school more than any other living actor and that he has taken lessons in every known art and branch of learning except grave digging.

He had to learn to ride a horse for Thomas H. Ince's screen version of "The Hottentot" and to do some fancy slugging of "A Man of Action," a new Ince mystery comedy soon to be released. He was just taking a brief vacation when he discovered that he was expected to twirl a wicked lariat for "The Sunshine Trail," his latest Ince comedy.

For two weeks young Douglas tried to master the art of throwing the rope. A cowboy expert who could do anything but make his lariat talk spent endless hours with him. At the end of two weeks they were both on the verge of nervous prostration.

"Cut out the rope scene or get a double," begged MacLean dejectedly.

The double was ruled out and the scene was voted a necessity by the director who hit upon the idea of putting a backbone in the rope so that it would know its master's voice. A lariat was specially braided with a wire down the center and strung up on a pulley.

Lessons began all over and this time MacLean met with success. There is a laugh a minute in "The Sunshine Trail" but MacLean claims no one ever will realize how many figurative tears it cost him to put over the rope-twirling scene in the production.

"The Sunshine Trail" will be shown at the Liberty theater starting tomorrow.

HEAVY RAINFALL AT WRONG PERIOD

Willamette Valley's Bumper Hay Crop On Ground When Wet Spell Comes

If the Willamette valley farmers had had the making of the weather for the past two days, most of them would have plugged up at least part of the leaks. They weren't ready for a flood.

The heaviest hay crop that the Willamette valley has grown in many years has just been grown, and most of it was cut and seasoned when the rain came. Hay that is estimated to make fully five tons to the acre, and some fields even more than that phenomenal yield, is found in some of the fields. With the coming of this rain, bright, sunny hay is expected to be the exception this year. It can't be hoped to get dry enough for stacking and baling, and hold its bright color, after such a rain. It does not necessarily lose its feed value, however, by being rain-discolored, so the crop is still possibly safe for feeding purposes. The hay that is still uncut, will be unharmed.

The Oregon growers had planned to ship out a car of Lambert cherries this week, but the rain will probably stop that. The cherries, already lusciously ripe, can hardly get through this rainy spell without cracking, which ruins them for shipment fresh.

They have to go for quick canning or evaporating at lower prices. The Royal Anne crop, that was the real money crop, was gotten out of the way at high prices before the rain came.

Just what the rain will have done to the logans is still uncertain. With the thermometer standing for 24 hours at from 56 to 60 degrees, the berries will not have been ripening seriously, and as most of the yards that are being picked at all had been pretty well cleaned up to date, picking can be resumed without many of the berries being over-ripe. With the prediction from the weather bureau that there will be at least today of showery weather, it may be necessary to pick the yards once for ripe fruit before attempting to pick for fresh fruit shipment.

The Oregon Loganberry Growers' Exchange, that has already shipped four and one-half cars of fresh fruit, some of this to New York, has not yet received returns from its experiment. The fruit has been carefully inspected, though none of this year's berries have been absolutely top-notch fruit for shipment, as the frequent rains have made it extra juicy, and it does not have the sugar content that a sunshiner season would produce. The Exchange is arranging for a rather elaborate market report of the berry sales; how they sell in comparison with other fruits, how they stand shipment, what the public says of them either before or after buying, and all the helpful data that can be secured to assist in meeting future demands. This year's shipment is an experiment, that will be resumed as soon as the weather permits, and it will be given all the test possible as an integral part of the berry business for the future.

The Salem exhibit will also include a showing of paper made by the Oregon Pulp & Paper company, the best products of the Kay woolen mill and the standard cartons of the Kings Food Products company.

Members of the Salem Business and Professional Women's club have each been assessed $5 in order that Salem may make a representative showing when the 2,000 delegates arrive in Portland. Mrs. Wilson announces that a special day will be later announced when 75 or 100 members of the Salem club will attend several of the sessions of the convention.

The delegates officially elected to represent Salem are Mrs. J. H. Brewer and Dr. Mary Rowland. Alternates are Mrs. La Moine Clarke and Mrs. Ella Wilson.

Every effort will be made to show the visiting delegates a fine time while in Portland, and members of the Salem club have contributed liberally to aid in the entertaining of the delegates.

The Business and Professional Women's club of the city is now recognized, with its 125 members, as one of the leading clubs of the city. It is understood that beginning next October efforts will be made by which the club will hold a regular weekly luncheon, just the same as the Rotary, Kiwanis or Lions clubs, and thereby give its members opportunity of hearing weekly the most interesting speakers in the northwest.
