By MARGUERITE GLEESON

Miss Lena Belle Tartar sang two solos last night at the concert and reception given by the Cherrians at the Home hospital. Her songs were "A Home in the Heart of a Rose" and "The Little Gray Home in the West."

Miss Annette Colquette, and Ervia E. Smith were married yesterday afternoon in the chapel of St. Paul's Episcopal church. Rev. H. D. Chambers officiated. Only relatives and close friends were present.

Mrs. Smith formerly taught at the Oregon State Deaf school. She is a daughter of Rev. and Mrs. D. H. Colquette of Little Rock, Ark. Mr. Smith is general agent for the New York Life insurance company in Salem. They will make their home in the Marion apartments.

Plans are practically complete for the national Association of University Women, to be held in Portland July 16 to 21 inclusive.

Mrs. Christina Van Holstein of the Teachers' college, at Stockholm, Sweden; Mrs. Hansa Mehta, from the University of Baroda, India; Mrs. K. S. McWilliam, president of the Federation of University Women in Canada, and Dr. Maria de Maevita, from the University of Madrid, Spain, prominent women who attended the recent world conference of education held in San Francisco last week, will be speakers at an international banquet to be held Thursday evening, June 19, at the Multnomah hotel at 7 o'clock.

Mrs. William Palmer Lucas of San Francisco will be toastmaster. A general educational meeting will be held at the Lincoln high school auditorium Wednesday afternoon, which will be open to the public. Harry B. Wilson, superintendent of schools in Berkeley, Cal., will speak on the "Needs in Public Elementary Education." President Richard E. Scholz of Reed college will also speak. He has taken for his subject "An Experiment in a College Curriculum."

An interesting feature of the convention will be an exhibit showing the characteristic features of educational institutions of the Pacific Northwest on the third floor of Central library, 10th and Yamhill streets, during the convention. This includes not only the work of individual colleges all over the United States, but a collection of paintings of wild flowers of Oregon by A. R. Sweetser, specimens of the wild flowers now in blossom in the vicinity of Portland; paintings of Oregon birds by Bruce Horsfall and bird photographs by W. L. Finley and Herman Bohlman. On the second floor lobby will be an exhibit of books used by high school classes in the study of natural science and arts.

Through the cooperation of Dr. Sweetser of the University of Oregon and the local Audubon society these bird and flower pictures are shown every spring in the library especially for the benefit of the school children of the city.

A series of entertainments will be held Wednesday night for the different groups of college people in the homes of prominent Portlanders. The Wellesley college people will entertain the officers and delegates of their college at the home of Mrs. Arthur Goldsmith, on Westover terrace; Dr. Aurilla Henry Reinhardt, president of Mills college, will be the honor guest of the Portland Mills college people at the home of Mrs. Robert L. Benson, No. 480 Davenport street; Mrs. Elliott R. Corbett will entertain the local Radcliffe people and visitors will be guests of Mrs. Ralph W. Wilbur and Mrs. A. W. Cooper at dinner at the Waverly Country club; Vassar college people will be the guests of Mrs. Henry Ladd Corbett.

President and Mrs. Richard Scholz of Reed college will hold a reception at their home on the campus of Reed college Monday night at 8 o'clock for the visiting delegation and the Portland branch.

The delegates will be the guests of the Portland branch of the Association of University Women

Friday, and will leave the Multnomah hotel at 2 o'clock for a trip on the Columbia river highway for dinner at Eagle Creek camp.

Mrs. Van Holstein in the house guest of Mrs. Ralph W. Wilbur during her stay. Mrs. Mildred Steinmetz is entertaining Mrs. Hansa Mehta, and Mrs. McWilliam is a visitor at the home of Mrs. C. B. Bodine, Mrs. George J. Gerlinger is entertaining Dr. Aurilla Henry Reinhardt.

Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Harris of Seattle were brief visitors in Salem yesterday while on their way to Corvallis. Mr. Harris is editor of the Pacific Poultryman and while here they were guests of W. C. Conner, editor of the Northwest Poultry Journal.

Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Needham went to McKenzie Bridge 60 miles south of Eugene. They will spend their vacation there, spending part of the time at Belknap Springs.

Mrs. F. A. Baker left yesterday for southern California where she will visit relatives for six weeks.

The women of the First Congregational church will meet for a social today at the church. This will be an all day affair and will end all meetings of the Women's Union until after vacation.

Writ of Mandamus Is Issued Against Gram

An alternative writ of mandamus was issued yesterday by order of Judge George G. Bingham upon C. H. Gram, commissioner of labor, demanding him to either issue a license to A. G. Lyons and H. J. Bennett, doing business in Portland under the name of the Star Employment Agency, or to show cause before July 18 why the license should not be issued. The hearing was set for 10 o'clock. The two partners declared they have complied with the law relative to obtaining a license, have submitted an executed bond, which with their application for license, was approved by Gram. The $50 annual license fee for the year June 15, 1923 to June 15, 1924, was also paid at this time, and accepted, they declare.

Gram refused to issue the license unless the plaintiffs paid the sum of $100, each partner to stand half of this amount. The attorney general has held that under the law each partner must pay the full license fee of $50.

CHAPTER NO. 352

THE STERN QUESTION MOTHER GRAHAM ASKED MADGE

True to Mrs. Ticer's prediction, Marion came into the kitchen immediately after the mistress of the house had sent her husband and son about their business. The child, still dewy-eyed with sleep, was an alluring picture with her wild-rose coloring and brown curls.

"Oh, Auntie Madge!" She greeted me warmly, then turned to Mrs. Ticer.

"Good morning, Mrs. Ticer," she said in her prettiest manner, and then, her mother's training satisfied, she broke out fearfully:

"They haven't gone to milk without me, have they?" "No, lambie-bird, they wouldn't dast," Mrs. Ticer assured her. "They know what I'd give 'em when they come in. But, tell me, did you hear anybody awake upstairs when you came down?" "I didn't hear a sound," Marion returned, "except," she added conscientiously, "Grandma Graham was sleeping pretty loud."

"That's all right then," Mrs. Ticer flashed an amused and relieved smile at me. "Now, Marion, here's a couple of cookies till breakfast. Run along and watch the men milk, but come back here after the first cow is done, for we want you to take a note to your mother. Tell the men to wait for you. It won't take you five minutes."

"She Must Never Suspect—"

"Thank you, Mrs. Ticer, I'll be back," the child said obediently, and ran off happily, munching her cookies as she went.

"That's the nicest child I ever saw," Mrs. Ticer declared, watching her with tender admiring eyes.

"Sure you're not prejudiced?" I asked slyly.

"Well! If I am," she retorted defiantly, "there's plenty of others tarred with the same stick around here, I notice."

"I plead guilty, for one," I returned.

"And now, if you'll let me sit here, I'll write that note to Mrs. Underwood."

"This table isn't fit for you to write at," she worried, but I hastily cleared a place for myself, and sat down, unheeding her protests.

"Lillian, dear," I wrote hastily. "Dickie is going to take his mother for a walk this morning, and by Machiavellian tactics let her discover the Dacy farm and plan to buy it. The reason you have no doubt guessed or now. But she must never suspect that I have looked at it, much less bargained for it. So please caution Marion before Mother G wakes up, not to say anything. I did not like to tell her for fear of confusing her. Hurrledly—Madge."

tween Tweedlededee and Tweedlededum.

An Interruption.

Mrs. Ticer went about the preparation of my breakfast as I wrote. When I had finished I noticed that while Marion's cup and breakfast service were laid on the Ticer family kitchen table, Mrs. Ticer was laying a tray for me, evidently preparing to take it into our sitting room in the other wing.

"Please, Mrs. Ticer," I rose and laid a restraining hand on her shoulder. "Won't you let me eat my breakfast out here with you and Marion? This is such a homey kitchen?"

"She looked at me doubtfully, but that she was pleased I knew by her expression.

"Of course, if you want to," she said finally.

"Indeed, I want to," I returned and was discussing my grapefruit when Marion danced in breathlessly, evidently worried for fear the men might decide to milk another cow before she could get back. I put my arm around the child and slipped the note into the pocket of her dress.

"Marion, dear," I said with the solemnity she likes when she is playing an imaginative game. "You are now a secret and important messenger of state. You must let no one see the message nor guess your errand until you have delivered it into the hands of your lady mother. Then you will listen to what she tells you, and return to me. But unless I am alone you will say nothing concerning this when you see me. Do you understand?"

"Aye, aye, my heke lady," Marion returned delightedly, curtseying prettily, and then she ran through the door leading into our wing. I turned back to my breakfast with a sigh of relief, feeling that I had caulked every possible leak of the disturbing facts I was trying to keep from Mother Graham's knowledge.

I had only half-finished the delicious breakfast Mrs. Ticer had prepared, and Marion had not yet returned from her mother's room, when a rustle at the door leading from the kitchen to our sitting room made me start nervously, and I looked up to see my august mother-in-law, in her inevitable gray dressing gown, standing in the doorway.

"Mrs. Ticer," she said acidly, "may I trouble you for—" she stopped as her eyes fell upon me.

"Margaret," she sternly demanded, "do you mean to tell me you are eating your breakfast calmly with your child unfeared?"

BY WAY OF APOLOGY

We thought he was a coward till a little while ago— Yes, thought he was a coward, just because he didn't know.

When the colors were a-calling it appeared he didn't hear. And we jumped to the conclusion he was defeated by his fear.

Though we knew he was short-sighted, for, it seemed, he hadn't seen

When a bully hugged his sweetheart on the street one Hal-lowe'en.

When a stipling in the office cast on him a fighting slur. He was meek and law-abiding and just called an officer.

When a tough abused his mother we expected him to speak. But he turned his back—and vanished—rather than the other cheek.

Yes, we thought he was a coward, just because we didn't know. But we learned how bold and daring he could be, a week ago—

Learned that he could be as reckless as the bravest that draws breath, Learned that he could step up smiling in the very face of death.

Learned it as we sought the preacher and the undertaker too, When there was, alas, no other little thing that we could do.

Then we learned this gallant spirit, with a daring naught could shrink, Had been using "bonded" whiskey, bootlegged to him as a drink.
