Scott pitched a good game until the sixth after which he allowed three runs on eight hits. In the ninth Shea struck out Hyatt with the tying run on the paths. Score:

To Celebrate Founding Of Pioneer Normal School

CONCORD, Vt., July 24.—The centennial of the founding of what is believed to have been the first normal school in this country will be celebrated in this little Vermont town August 14 and 15. A pageant of education, in which 300 residents of the town will participate, will be given on the evenings of both days, and in the afternoon of the second day a monument will be unveiled at Concord Corner on the site of the school.

Rev. Samuel Read Hall, who was born in Croydon, N. H., in 1795, was called to the pastorate at the Congregational Church at Concord Corner in 1823. He accepted on condition that he be allowed to establish and maintain an institution for the training of teachers for the common schools. In the same year he opened what was variously known as Concord Academy and Columbia Academy, and later as the Essex County Grammar School, with the principal object of training men to be teachers. In 1829 Dr. Hall published a treatise on education said to have been the first printed work on pedagogy in this country. He also introduced the use of blackboards in schools.

could name 40 other persons who have also seen the brute. But owing to its apparent preference to nights and apparently dark nights, few have had as good a view as I.

In telling of his experience, the communication declared:

"We had camped a short distance from the lake in the night before and all three of us arose early to be ready for the early duck flight. We started to walk around the lake close to the shore in order to jump any birds, when suddenly, coming around a slight raise in the ground, we came upon this animal, nearly three-fourths out of the water in the shallow water near the shore. We were less than 20 yards from him and he saw us at the same time we came upon him. It lifted its head, made a peculiar hissing noise and disappeared.

"The animal was probably 40 feet long, including the tail and the head was raised in alarm. In general appearance the animal was not unlike an alligator, except that the head was stubbier and there seemed to be a projection that was like a horn between the eyes and nostrils. The animal was built much more heavily throughout than an alligator, and was not at all sluggish in its actions. Its color seemed a dull gray or brown, although it was hardly light enough to distinguish color well.

"There was, however, a very distinctive and somewhat unpleasant odor noticeable for several moments after the beast itself had vanished into the water. We stood for several minutes after the animal had gone, hardly knowing what to do or say when we noticed several hundred feet out from the shore a considerable commotion in the water, like a school of fish sometimes make.

"Sure enough, the animal came to the surface, floated there a moment and then lashed the water with its tail, suddenly dived, and we saw no more of him."

"My theory is that there is a subterranean passage from that lake to other underground lakes and that the beast, and probably others, live underground, coming up only occasionally. Such geological formations are not rare. Many are known to exist in Kentucky and Virginia, where blind fish and other creatures have been frequently found. I can explain nothing more."

The Anglers' club at Alliance, near Hay Springs, yesterday authorized its president to order whale harpoon, line and whaling gun from a Boston concern, a World-Herald special despatch stated. A large posse will be organized and the lake will be carefully searched in an effort to find the animal.

INDIAN FIGHTER IS NEAR DEATH

F. A. Thompson Who Fought Sioux and Rebels Same Year Is Ill

F. A. Thompson, an old and respected citizen of South Salem, has been seriously ill, so that his recovery has been doubtful. But he has had a career that marks him as one who has lived an important life.

He was a resident of Minnesota back in the early 60s, and he enlisted in one of the Minnesota regiments to serve in the Civil war. The troops were uniformed at Fort Snelling, but not armed. They started out for southland, to be sent to the fighting front. They had marched one day when a mounted courier overtook them, his horse lathered almost to exhaustion. He brought word that the Sioux Indians had declared war, and that the whole state was in danger. The troops returned to the fort, received their arms, drilled for a time, and then took the field against the Indians.

Chiet Little Crow, the Indian leader, was a real warrior, and his men were as fierce and implacable as any natives of the west. If he had waited over a day or two longer, until the regiment, practically the last outfit of fighting men in the state, had gotten out of reach, he must have had the state at his mercy, but the painted warriors couldn't wait, and so the regiment of soldiers was still within reach. In the campaign that followed General Sibley defeated the Indians everywhere. Thirty-nine of them were hanged on one scaffold, according to most of the United States histories—and Soldier Thompson was one of the men who saw them swing. When the last danger of Indian trouble was over, Mr. Thompson went on into the civilized war, and did his part to save the union.

RICKARD DENIES FINANCES WORRY

Announcement on Dempsey-Firpo Battle Is Expected This Afternoon

NEW YORK, July 24.—(By the Associated Press.)—Negotiations for a heavyweight title match between Jack Dempsey and Luis Angel Firpo, cloaked in mystery for the last 10 days, reached such a stage today that Promoter Tex Rickard asserted he probably would have a definite announcement to make at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Rickard denied that Firpo had at any time caused a hitch in negotiations by excessive financial demands as reported. "There has never been any difficulty over terms," he said. "We settled that matter at the start, but there are a lot of other things to consider. I hope to have things on a definite footing, however, inside of the next 24 hours."

Cows Addicted to Loco To Be Arrested in Montana

HELENA, Mont., July 24.—A cow, or any other animal, which becomes addicted to the narcotic habit in Montana, may be arrested and confined in the state sanitarium until pronounced cured by the physicians in charge, according to a new state law.

The new law, legislators say, is the result of a clerical error made in the closing days of the session. An amendment, intended to strengthen the anti-narcotic law, was tacked onto the law providing for the condemnation of stock driven insane by the eating of loco weed.

WOLVERINE IS NEAR EXTINCT

Most Bloodthirsty Animal in United States Is Making Last Stand

SAN FRANCISCO, July 24.—The Sierra Nevada wolverine, known as the "glutton of America," and famed for his ferce and bloodthirsty disposition, is making his last stand in the high Sierras, according to Walter Fry, head of the nature guide service, Sequoia National park, California. The wolverine, Mr. Fry says, is being killed off by man, his natural enemy, and by his own gluttonous habit of killing and eating the porcupine. The latter's quills puncture the wolverine's intestines causing him a death of agony in from 7 to 10 days.

"The wolverine," says Mr. Fry, "is by far the largest and most formidable of the weasel family. It is a strong, heavy-bodied animal, seldom weighing more than 125 pounds, or exceeding 22 inches in height or 40 inches in length. The wolverine, commonly speaking, is not an aggressive animal, but will fight desperately when attacked, or for the care of its young.

"When once engaged in combat the beast knows no such thing as retreat, dying, if need be, but never falling back. He fights as long as a single spark of life remains.

"Mountain lion, bear and mountain coyotes, whether coming singly or collectively upon a wolverine, seem to fully realize his ferociousness and quickly give way to his path. The wolverine not only expects the larger animals to leave him alone, but requires them to give up their own prey and permit him to satisfy his gluttonous appetite. I have witnessed big game leave a carcass when a wolverine appeared, giving him free reign to devour the remains.

ing him free reign to devour the remains.

"The wolverine has no winning bursts of speed to catch his food supply, nor has he the gift of stalking his quarry. His lack of speed and skill has forced the animal to be a scavenger and eat anything in the way of flesh that is captured or found dead. He often follows the trap lines of fur trappers, eating or destroying the catches, baits, and, at times, dragging away the traps.

"He will invade a ranger's or trapper's cabin by tearing a hole through the roof or side wall, destroy the food contents, and what he cannot eat or carry away, he will destroy in a manner that renders the food unfit for use. He will expend a surprising amount of labor in carrying off and burying foodstuffs and articles for which he has no use."

However, despite the destructive nature of the wolverine, Mr. Fry says the animal should not be exterminated. He urges that steps be taken immediately for the animal's protection. He says: "These animals have played an important part in helping to save the larger game animals during the attacks of contagious diseases by consuming as food the dead and sick animals, thus preventing the spread of the contagion. At their present rate of extinction they will soon go down and out and will join in history the mastodon and mammoth of the past."

There are more postoffices named after Franklin than any other man who ever lived—seven more than carry the name of Washington, who is fourth on the list. They haven't yet got around to naming them after Chaplin, although the president found a Fairbanks in Alaska.
