Porch Easily Made Most Attractive.

Faded rugs, leathered furniture, and rugs may be brightened with little work

The porch may be made attractive without the expenditure of much money by the clever woman who has learned to wield a paint brush. Old furniture that is gray and uninviting can be brightened by a few coats of paint. After the paint has dried a pattern may be stenciled on the backs of the chairs and along the edge of the table top. If cretonne is used for cushions, a clever effect may be obtained by pasting designs out from the cretonne on the furniture. Instead of the stencil design, and shelacking over the pattern.

Grass rugs that have become faded and dirty may be washed with soap and water and then painted the desired color with fabric dyes prepared as for dyeing material by boiling. The best results will be obtained if the rug is damp when the dye is applied.

The frame of a canvas porch swing is not difficult to cover if a pattern is cut from the old covering, and followed closely. Canvas, denim or cretonne may be used successfully for this. If the furniture has been painted green, green and gray striped canvas would look well for the covering for the swing. The green is always cool looking and in harmony with the coloring of the outdoors.

Flower boxes on the porch railing not only add a cheerful color but help to form a screen making the porch more secluded.
