Bluing Requires Careful Attention

Bluing is a fine art and requires careful attention. It is easy to neglect to blue and also easy to blue too much. The object of bluing is to make clothes white. Bluing ought to be used carefully. Clothes should be dipped through bluing water and not soaked in it. If the clothes are blue too heavily the bluing can be boiled out or washed out in suds. Just enough bluing should be used to make the water sky blue.

There are three types of bluing. Aniline blue is a dye commonly used in commercial laundries. It is entirely soluble in water and a good bluing to use in the household if not too much is used. Aniline blue seems rather expensive when buying it from the store but an ounce will make a gallon of very strong bluing so it is considered the cheapest in the end. If Prussian bluing, common bottle bluing, is used be sure the clothes are rinsed thoroughly and that no soap remains. This type of bluing is made on an iron base, which in the presence of alkali turns to iron rust, especially under the heat of an iron. Ultramarine bluing, the solid form, is insoluble in water. It is not successful if allowed to settle in the water. If the clothes are allowed to stand in this kind of bluing water little blue spots appear on the clothes.

Roumanian Fascisti Modeled After Italian

BUCHAREST, Aug. 2.—A Fascist party, after the model of the Italian Fascisti, has been organized in Roumania. Its motto is "Justice to the just, death to the evil; Fascismo never forgets." In its program the new party declares that Roumania needs, first of all, a dictatorship for the restoration of order, security and honest dealing. It calls also for the expulsion of foreigners, whose presence to the extent of 2,000,000 persons gravely complicates the housing problem.

CHICAGO CHEMIST DIVIDES ELEMENTS

Dr. William D. Harkins May Revolutionize Theory of Century

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—Two chemical elements hitherto considered indivisible have been separated by Dr. William D. Harkins, professor of physical chemistry at the University of Chicago, whose experiments in this field are expected to revolutionize the chemical theory of a century.

Dr. Harkins explained how he tried to separate chlorine, the greenish yellow gas used by the Germans when they first introduced chemical warfare. Chlorine has long been considered one of the 90 odd elements, like carbon, oxygen and hydrogen, which have defied all attempts at division. These so-called elements are present in the earth and in the sun.

"For five years we worked," he said. "We tried all sorts of apparatus and used more than a ton of hydrogen chloride before we succeeded. The gas was diffused through the stems of church warden pipes. These pipes are made of white clay and have stems between 18 and 24 inches long. The lighter parts of the gas passed outward through the stems. The heavier parts remained, and thus we discovered that our so-called element, chlorine, could be separated and another time-honored theory had surrendered. Virtually all physicists and chemists in the United States have accepted the results."

Dr. Harkins then demonstrated that mercury, also considered a fundamental substance, can be broken up. Like the chlorine twins, the parts of mercury are alike but are vastly different in weight, he explained. Dr. Harkins is performing similar experiments with zinc and cadmium to see if they too are mixtures instead of elements.

"These experiments indicate, then, that there probably is no one fundamental element instead of the 90 we have been pinning our faith on all these years," Dr. Harkins said. "That basic element is hydrogen, and, according to my theory, all the so-called elements are compounds of helium or helium with hydrogen. But since helium itself is built up from hydrogen, then all the elements are intratomic compounds of hydrogen."
