Workers Hear Lecture—George M. Aitken, field safety engineer in the Oregon and Columbia basin division for the National Safety Council, gave a lecture at the noon hour yesterday to the workers of the paper mill of the Oregon Pulp & Paper company. The lecture was illustrated by stereopticon. W. A. Marshall, chairman of the state industrial accident commission, was present.

Long Hemp Exhibited—Hemp stalks 17 feet in height are on exhibition at the state prison. This was brought in from the Lake Labish district, where nearly 100 acres is being harvested at present. The specimens are said to be exceptionally high, and are not of good quality for manufacturing rope. Other bundles displayed showed a much finer grade of plant, and were from four to seven feet in height. The difference in height is said to be due to the variance in soil fertility and to having planted too far apart.

Salem is going to be better prepared and more dressed up for the state fair than ever before. It is to be hoped that the glad hand may be in evidence all over the city, and the itching palm kept in the background; or thumbs down invoked against it altogether.

There are a number of Japanese people in and about Salem. They produce over $100,000 worth of celery annually in the Labish Meadows, besides many tons of other vegetables. They have cleaning establishments in Salem, and there are some high class cooks among them. Naturally, all these people have relatives and friends in the devastated districts of Japan, and they are worrying very much over the question of their safety—of which so far they have heard nothing.
