MOVIE GOSSIP

Oregon "The Girl of the Golden West" Liberty "The Fog"

"The Girl of the Golden West," which opened yesterday at the Oregon theater, is a triumph for its director, Edwin Carewe. This famed success of the legitimate stage has been molded into a cinema epic which is a credit to the motion picture industry and to Associated First National, the releasing organization of the picture.

David Belasco, who wrote the original stage presentation, should be proud of this picturization. His almost immortal story is re-lived on the silver screen, with all the fineness of a Belasco stage presentation. The California of its romantic period of '49 is brought out from the pages of history; the bygone days of the California pioneers are picturized as never before.

Esmeralda, a colorful bandit-caballero of the period, finds himself in a predicament as he is about to rob the Polka saloon, for the owner of the establishment is The Girl whom he met on the road a few days before and carried across a stream. It is a case of love at first sight and a race between the sheriff and the bandit for The Girl. In a series of thrilling and captivating incidents, in which the bandit is exposed, wounded and nearly hanged, the story is brought to a thrilling conclusion. It is a beautiful love story in which thrills have not altogether been forgotten. The mountain fastness of the beautiful background of California is molded into the picture through the beautiful camera work of Sol Polito and Thomas Storey.

It is evident that Director Carewe made wise selection in the choice of players for he has picked actors that are a credit to the picture. When being trained, the police dog is not permitted to see any human other than his trainer. Absolute obedience leads it to suspect strangers; it can neither be intimidated, coaxed or lured; it refuses all food offered by strangers, though it may be hungry when properly trained, this intelligent animal will face pistol fire unflinchingly, savagely leaping to attack.

When well-trained it leaps a seven-foot obstacle easily and can broad jump a stream twelve to fifteen feet in width. It can ferret out hidden goods and find coats that have been dropped. In fact, it can search out every clue that may be valuable. Another remarkable thing about the police dog is its quickness in sensing the presence of criminals with whom it has been in previous contact. It has been known to pick out a man from a large crowd.

Rintintin, the police dog and screen actor, not only does all these things but is recognized as being easily the peer of all dogs. It has the dog championship for jumping. Its remarkable skill can be seen in "Where the North Begins," the picture of the grim northland, to be shown at the Oregon theater for four days, commencing Friday evening.

"The Fog," shown for the first time at the Liberty theater yesterday, is one of the most absorbing and best acted photoplays it has ever been our good fortune to see. And it was enthusiastically received. Before we saw it, we deemed it hardly possible that so many elements of entertainment value could be crowded into one photoplay. But in this picture are adventure, pathos, villainy, heroism, love, infatuation—the whole range of human action.

It is the story of how a sensitive boy finally triumphed—through love—over the tyranny and meanness of his environment. It is a story packed with thrills and rapid action, and its love theme is very unusual. The acting was really superb.

The cast includes Mildred Harris, Cullen Landis, Louise Fazenda, Ethel Wales, Louise Diesser, Marjorie Prevost, Ann May, Ralph Lewis, David Butler, Frank Currier and Edward Phillips. Each role is interpreted with remarkable sincerity and convincence. Praise should also be accorded the director, Paul Powell, for his masterful handling of William Dudley Pelley's fascinating story.

The photoplay was adapted by H. H. Van Loan and was produced for Metro under the personal supervision of Max Graf. The scenario was prepared by Winifred Dunn. The photography is the work of John R. Arnold.

"Penrod and Sam," a picturization of Booth Tarkington's famous story of boy life, is to be the feature next week at the Oregon theater. This First National picture was directed by William Beaudine, and is enacted by a cast which includes Benny Alexander, Joe Butterworth, Buddy Messinger, Joe McCray, Gene Jackson, Rockcliffe Fellows, Gladys Brockwell, Mary Philbin, Gareth Hughes and William W. Mong.

Benny Alexander, who plays Penrod, is one of the best known child actors, and he has excelled himself in the portrayal of this remarkably human character. Joe Butterworth will be seen as Sam, his buddy and conspirator in mischievous adventures. Buddy Messinger, the star of the "Buddy Messinger Comedy Series," plays Roddy Bitts, the mortal enemy of Penrod and Sam. His sister, Gertrude Messinger, is Penrod's little sweetheart.

The major portion of the picture is one succession of laughs, chuckles and smiles, but there are moments of tender pathos, especially the scene which shows the death of Penrod's dog, "Duke." "Duke" had been the lad's inseparable companion, even sharing his master's bed—without the knowledge of his parents. And there is a generous portion of romance, for Penrod falls in love early in life and manfully disregards the ridicule aimed at him as a result.

Earle Williams has one of the best pictures of his career in "You Never Know," which will be shown at the Bligh theater Thursday and Friday. It has all the elements that excite the human interest and tend to make a production popular.

There is the atmosphere of the Latin countries, full of rhythm, melody, fire and passion. It is an atmosphere conducive of love, romance, duelling, revolution and feuds. Then there is the transition to the life in the North, where man is slow to anger and conservative in his actions. This contrast brings out all of the beauty and romance of the western hemisphere. In a South American cafe set, Spanish señoritas dance the dances of their people in a stirring manner. Then, too, in the South American sequences are thrilling escapes and huge mob scenes which occur during an uprising.

Much of the comedy and several of the dramatic situations revolve around Muggsy, a ward of Eddie Manning, the hero. This role is handled by Coy Watson, Jr., in a manner that has made many who have seen him work predict that this youngster will rival any of the child prodigies on the screen today. He is a combination of them all. He has the freckles of Wesley Barry, the innocent roughness of Jackie Coogan, and the smile of Mickey Daniels. This youth, with a dog secured after a long and careful search, do much to enhance the value of the picture and occasionally steal scenes from Earle Williams.

JEWELRY FIRM BUYS BUILDING

Pomeroy & Keene Purchase La Branche Property on State Street

Purchase of the La Branche building on the north side of State between Liberty and Commercial by Pomeroy & Keene jewelers, from Morris Klorfein, of the Bake-Rite bakery, was announced yesterday. The purchase of another location was made necessary a few months ago when the newly organized First National bank announced plans for the erection of a six-story office and bank building on the southwest corner of State and Liberty, the present location of the jewelry store.

While Pomeroy & Keene have a four-year lease upon the building occupied at present, it is understood arrangements have been made with the bank to shorten the time of the lease. The lease runs for four more years. When the move will be made has not been decided upon by the jewelry firm, but the firm is planning some extensive remodeling before taking possession. No announcements of new locations have yet been made by the businessmen occupying the upper portion of the building.

Nothing was said yesterday concerning the consideration involved in the transaction, but the estimated amount is believed by many business men to be around $35,000. The property sold by Mr. Klorfein was purchased by him less than a year ago for around $30,000, it is said.

At present the new location of Pomeroy & Keene is occupied by the Welch Electric company and a shoe shine shop on the ground floor with the Hotel Oregon in the second story. The deal which culminated yesterday has been contemplated for some time, Mr. Keene saying about a week ago that they had an option on the Klorfein property at that time, and a deposit made.

Pomeroy & Keene have occupied their present location for the last 10 years. C. T. Pomeroy has been in the jewelry business in Salem for about 25 years and Dr. A. A. Keene in the combined optical and jewelry business for nearly 20 years. Prior to the partnership the jewelry store was conducted under the name of Gardner & Keene.

Lack of Rain Spoils Potatoes at Silverton SILVERTON, Or., Oct. 16.—(Special to The Statesman)—The potato digging season has begun among the Silverton farmers. They report that so far the crop shows up exceptionally poor. Some report that there are enough if they were large enough. Others report that there are but few potatoes under each hill and that the few are very small. It is said that the failure of the crop is due to lack of rain in growing season.
