Flax, hemp and other crops. There is no better hemp land on earth than this beaver dam.

Busy Times Ahead L. O. Herrold is the manager of all this work. J. O. Hayes Jr. will be here and in the harness from now on. As soon as they can get onto the land in the spring, they will have five tractors and a gang of men employed in clearing the rest of the tract. They have four tractors there now, and they will buy two more.

There was mention above of the main drainage canal. It will take over 100 miles of smaller ditches to completely drain the tract, when it is all ready for crops. Onions and onion sets have been the major crops so far; but from now on there will be a great deal of diversification. J. O. Hayes Jr. expects to experiment with asparagus, celery and many other crops. There are great possibilities in hemp, when markets are assured for what might be raised.

Great Prospective Tonnage There will be in good time be 2000 to 3000 cars a year, and perhaps a great many more, of products to ship to the markets from the Labish Meadows acreage. It is the biggest thing of the kind in Oregon.

It is said that there have been recent preliminary railroad surveys; the idea evidently being to skirt the beaver dam land and be ready for the great tonnage that will go to the markets by freight and express shipments.

These California boosters, the Hayes brothers, have certainly started something that promises big things for the Salem district; and they have steadily carried on pouring out large sums of money. They will deserve all the profits they may finally reap from their enterprise, and certainly every one in this city and this section will wish for them abundant returns on account of their big investment and their far sighted faith.

The buildings on the Hayes land—the beginning of the flourishing vegetable metropolis—are about 12 miles from the Oregon capitol.

Mr. Hayes, Sr., will be departing for his homeward trip today. But he leaves behind as a hostage his son, who should be made welcome here in Salem.

Budget Campaign Workers for YMCA Will Continue Operations

Though the total of $13,000 sought for the financial budget of the YMCA was not reached at noon yesterday, both captains and team workers are jubilant over the response that has been made during the first three days of the campaign, for $2300 was added to the amount previously collected, bringing the total to date to $9927, leaving but $3037 to be raised. Efforts to complete the quota will be doubled, and the first of the week is expected to see the entire amount raised.

Exultation upon the part of the workers was created by a comparison with the progress of the drive this year with that of last year, when $9731 was reported at the end of the 17th day of the campaign, $196 less than that reported at the end of the third day this year.

Short and enthusiastic talks were made by each of the workers, with a short and snappy address by Rev. Harry Johnson. The workers will report further progress at another luncheon at the YMCA building today noon.
