Will E. Ride & Co., an athletic comedian and a pretty miss, present a comedy and unique offering on unicycles. Their stunts are of the kind that will thrill and enthrall, while the knocks and jolts to which they subject each other are laughable. At the Bligh today.

Morris & Lane are blackface comedians who sing, talk and dance with a bit of originality all their own. These boys rely mostly upon their dancing to put them over. However, their comedy talk which comes in for a good many laughs, is not to be overlooked. The comedy member works with a way all his own, and the straight member is a good foil for him. The act is a smart and humorous bit of entertainment. At the Bligh today.

France & McCree, a well-known musical comedy duo present an act which is built for laughing purposes and which is "interwoven with clever musical numbers. Miss McCree is a clever little woman of the ingenue type and wears some stunning gowns. Mr. France is a comedian of no mean ability and with the assistance of Miss McCree, can guarantee you a laugh a second. At the Bligh today.

Frank Caggan, a versatile musician, presents a novel diversion of many beautiful and bright numbers, rendered on several different instruments. He is an accomplished trombone, saxophone, banjo and euphonium artist, being one of the foremost musicians in the vaudeville field. This is an especially attractive bit of variety with a beautiful setting and ten minutes of solid pleasure. We can assure you that this will be a wonderful treat to music lovers. At the Bligh today.

Florence Vidor, who comes to the Liberty theatre Tuesday in the Associated Exhibitors feature drama, "Conquering the Woman," proves that a woman cannot be tamed with a club. It is a method far more subtle and artful than mere brute strength. While Petruchio tamed his Katherine in that manner, the modern girl has to be handled in a manner far more subtle and artful than mere brute strength. She is not made of the stuff that will be broken to your will. She must be molded with care and skill.

"Conquering the Woman" was directed by King W. Vidor and adapted from the story, "Kidnapping Collie," by Henry C. Rowland. It shows a father's desperate plan to cure his daughter of what he called her "new-fangled, high-falutin' society notions" and save her from marrying a fortune hunting count. The story is said to be told in a satirical vein. Prominent in the cast are David Eastler, Peter Burke, Bert Sprotte, Harry Todd and others.

theatre, Joseph M. Schenk has given the screen a "bigger and better" picture—an excellent play, well acted and magnificently staged.

The film is historical romance, but it is unique in that the characters are human and appealing, while no liberties are taken with history. It is unique, too, in that though the backgrounds are the latest word in gigantic and picturesque setting, not for once do the backgrounds obtrude upon the story. The magnificent settings are there because the locale of the story is faithfully reproduced. The thousands of extras sweep across the scenes in those massive settings in incidents related to the story. There is an abundance of clashing swords, slashed doublets, court beauties, swaggering horsemen—but it is the story, a moving, heart-appalling story, which is pre-eminent. It is the story of a love that conquers pride and hereditary hate, telling of a Huguenot noble, Rupert de Vriac (Conway Tearle) who, to save the life of his sweetheart, becomes slave of his hereditary enemy, Comte de la Roche, for five years, and who is made to feel his lowly position by the haughty sister of this enemy, Yolande de Breux (Norma Talmadge). He saves her invalid sister from the attack of a wolf, and later saves her from maddened soldiers who seek the life of the despised Duc de Tours (Wallace Beery), who she shields in her uncle's castle. Romance buds, but Yolande resists the call of her heart, ever reminding herself of Rupert's former sweetheart. But later she learns that this lady had proved faithless, and secures the release of Rupert from his obligation. This is the briefest of brief sketches of the plot. It moves rapidly through numerous dramatic situations to the sweeping away of an old family feud in noble love. Norma Talmadge plays the complex part of the adamant aristocrat with conviction.

OREGON U LOSES TO PULLMAN TEAM

PULLMAN, Wash., Nov. 3.—Defeating the University of Oregon in one of the hardest fought games ever staged here, the Washington State college Cougars broke into the winner class in Coast conference football today, winning over Oregon 13 to 7. In the first three periods the Cougars outplayed the Oregon team, but every play was a fight for inches.

The Cougar's first score came in the first period when Pete Cramer blocked a punt and raced 20 yards for a touchdown. The kick failed. The second came in the third when WSC recovered a fumble on Oregon's 15-yard line and sent Johnny Glenn across in a
