In an investigation based on circulation of ten leading magazines to determine the reading interest of different states, Oregon ranked SECOND. (California first, Washington third.)

Under the five educational measures of the Russell Sage Foundation, to determine the educational efficiency of the different states, Oregon ranks SECOND. (California first.) In literacy, Oregon ranks THIRD.

This all makes a splendid showing for Oregon's rank educationally.

Prof. J. B. Horner has made the statement that there are more institutions of higher learning in the Willamette valley than in any other section of the world of similar size.

The seven days commencing with Sunday will be observed as National Education Week all over the United States-

And the direction of the activities in this respect for this city is in charge of the Salem Woman's Club. There will be posters made by pupils in the public schools and displayed in the down town districts. There will be attempts made in numerous lowing for the publication, with ways to secure a larger interest on the part of parents and the advice that it is wholesome: the public generally in the public schools-

And there will be an especial emphasis upon an invitation man preach a funeral sermon; I r more people to visit the schools; to observe the work being heard a slim woman sing "Abide

Then why not?

It is a distinction worth striving for; worth working for ong and hard.

It would naturally follow that the state with the highest verage education and intelligence would forge ahead of all the rest in worth while attainments in all fields, even in manufacturing and commercial lines.

It is highly proper in this connection to call attention to match them in any game they great a case of stop-thlef as we the results of exhaustive undertaking of research work that play. has just been completed. The Commonwealth Fund of New York City granted Stanford University $34,300 for research work to investigate the theory of Lombroso that gifted children are stunted in stature, sickly and queer; and the University supplemented this with further donations-

And 250,000 California children in all were examined, their mentality being determined by giving them the national intelligence test; the test applied to enlisted men. Those who made high scores in this were then given the Stanford-Binet individual test and if they survived this they were labeled as especially bright voungsters-

And of the 250,000 examined 1500 were eventually selected as especially gifted children. Sixteen page blanks covering the habits and tastes and pastimes of these 1500 were sent to the paid movie stars are going to be parents, and the teachers further supplemented this with infor- revised. In the last two years mation they had gleaned about their charges. It was discovered these prices have gone to absurdthat the bright pupils were almost without exception in good ity. Checking up their records and comparing them with those of 700 children chosen at random without regard to their mental qualifications, there was found little difference in physique and health. These have no connection with mentality and there is no reason, according to the findings why the gifted child or man should be different from his less taiented brother.

. Many great artists have been sickly and erratic, but so have people who have no glittering attributes. According to the conclusions of this investigation, a talented artist can be just as normal and healthy as a bricklayer. The flowing hair and wild eyes are affectations, and the attenuated frame probably due to the fact that the public hasn't yet shown proper appreciation of his art, and meals are missing now and then.
