THE WORLD'S AGRICULTURAL RESULTS

On the basis of statistical data and other information published in the October International Report of Agricultural and Commercial Statistics of the International Institute of Agriculture, the results of the Northern Hemisphere harvests are now ascertainable, together with estimates for some of the more important crops in the Southern Hemisphere. The aggregates for the Northern Hemisphere (xclusive of Rusisa) in 1923 surpass those of 1922 by 7.6 million metric tons of wheat (10%), by 3.2 million of rye (15%), 2.8 million of barley (13%), 6.4 million of oats (14%). These 'increases mainly arise from plentiful yields in Europe and North Africa, where a favorable season was experienced, in sharp contrast with the drawbacks suffered last year by the grain crops. In North America and in Asiatic countries the totals are very sim-Har to last year's, which showed good results.

A preliminary estimate, quite provisional, from the Southern Hemisphere is available from Argentina, where the wheat yield is forecasted at 6.8 million tons, which is the highest figure on record for that country, and shows an increase of 1.6 million metric tons (31%) over last year. Again, in Australia the area under wheat is nearly similar to that in 1922. and good yields are anticipated, as conditions are favorable during growth. It may therefore be regarded as certain that the aggregate production of these four grain crops is considerably larger than it was last year. This is not all, for the -if you use "Western Giant" Cords on your car.
