T. B. PATIENTS HIGHLY PLEASED

They Are Grateful to Mills' Oriole Orchestra for a Delightful Evening

(The following communication comes from the state tuberculosis hospital, and it shows a degree of appreciation and gratitude that is heart stirring.)

Editor Statesman: On Thursday evening we were favored with a very delightful concert, and it is but natural that we should therefore try to express our gratitude.

I have heard of the golden plumage of a bird called "the Oriole" but on Thursday night we listened for the first time to "Mills' Orioles"—a five-piece orchestra from Salem—for two hours; hours that passed far too fast!

Personally I must confess that I entered the hall a bit skeptical, but as soon as the musicians let loose I was convinced of the futility of my previous conclusion.

The program was opened with a gay, breezy and lively march, which was at once to the very marrow of our bones and as an immediate result we jumped out of our shells. It acted like a powerful tonic to our nerves and in our fancy we ones more roamed abroad among real people.

At the end of the first piece the audience broke into a perfect avalanche of applause and for some time the waves kept on rolling.

Again they were off. This time they hit upon a peppy piece of dance music, and this in turn was followed up by a good many others.

The violinist, with his vivid, picturesque personality, his silvery hair and his young, pleasant yet earnest face, furnished colorful background. His magical bow at times galloped madly across the strings; at other times it jumped in short but measured staccato-jerks, and yet at other times he drew the bow over the responding and quivering strings in a gentle, caressing, mournful sort of way. And then the drummer! He certainly knew his business. Without any apparent effort he seemed to do sixteen different things all at the same time. How he hit the little drum! Next with lightning rapidity he grasped a big club and swatted the big drum with vengeance, and so on. What pepper and salt is to our food a drummer must be to the orchestra, for he gives it the necessary flavor.

On the good Orioles played and with each number we T. B.ers grew more enthusiastic.

I noticed many a shoulder unconsciously responding to the snappy rhythm of the music. No doubt young and old alike were, in fancy, whirling around a slick floor worshipping at the shrine of "Terpsichore," the gentle Muse of all dancing. Even the musicians seemed to have a very splendid time. When at last the crowd broke up, one could hear on all sides comments like this:

"Oh, gosh! wasn't that simply awful glorious?" This came from an ultra modern flapper.

"Say, that good lookin' lady was a humdinger at pounding the ivory." That of course came from a mere man.

Another said: "That guy was certainly handy with the chop-suey sticks."

Still another remarked, "He was a Jim dandy, that boy on the violin, and he knew it like a book"—and so on.

Once more we wish to thank you one and all, and here is wishing "Mills' Orioles" a hearty success.

FRED LOCKLEY SPEAKS HERE

"Father & Son, Inc." Subject of Address by Portland Newspaperman

Emphasizing the point that a boy visualizes his father as a sort of hero who becomes his ideal, Fred Lockley of the Oregon Journal voiced a plea of closer harmony and the development of a partnership between father and son in speaking at the Chamber of Commerce luncheon Monday noon. He selected as his topic "Father and Son, Incorporated."

"People want to be remembered in this world after they have left it," Mr. Lockley said. "The author lives through his books, the artist through his canvases and the sculptor through impassive marble. All of us can be sculptors of real, warm live children and their destinies are in our hands and are moulded more by our actions than by our words."

Single Men Pittied
"Love, time and interest invested in children are worth more than the mere increasing of wealth, the speaker continued, and the man who remains single or who is married and is too selfish to have children is to be pitied.

"The whole world is troubled at present and a new world will crystallize out of the chaos. Will your boys have a part of this new world and are you going to live on through them? Will it be a better world because of you? Impress yourself upon your children. Clean blood is a priceless heritage."

Some of the handicaps and things that often come between father and son are the lack of confidence and vision, the speaker said. The former was described as a lack of faith in the individual, "for," Mr. Lockley said,

"If you believe a thing is possible and work toward a definite goal, that goal will materialize. Lack of concentration is also to be avoided.

Proper Tools Necessary

"Your boys must have the proper tools to equip them for life. The greatest of these tools is knowledge. Another handicap to a boy is the inability to take punishment and stand reverses and the urge to quit. When hard things come stay with them. These trials will make you worth while. Be a good mixer and see things from others viewpoints. Be friendly and feel friendly toward others. Choose the right kind of associates."

Among the things that are necessary to obtain the greatest amount of understanding between a father and a son are the providing of necessary outlet for his animal spirits.

"Be a chum to your boy," he said, "and if you grow up with him you never will grow apart. Teach him to regard the rights of others and the need of bodily vigor."

"The greatest handicaps and those best known were said to be ignorance, conceit, untruthfulness, dishonesty, intemperance, cigarettes and intoxicating liquor.

Thoughts Mould Character

"Your thoughts are moulding you day by day and hour by hour into something better or something worse. These thoughts form habits and in turn will be reflected in the lines of your face," Mr. Lockley said in closing. "The solution is service to others and all of us should try to impress upon our boys these facts in order that they may become greater men than their dads."

Mr. Lockley prefaced his talk with a few remarks, saying that he really needed no introduction to the men present, as he had numbered among them many friends for a long period of years. Mr. Lockley has been closely identified with the newspaper business in Oregon for the last 40 years, and first located in Salem in 1881. He was introduced by George Putnam, chairman of the day.

EFFORT MADE TO RECOVER TITLE

Van Winkle Will Ask Delegation To Act In Hyde-Benson Land Case

The Oregon delegation in congress will be asked by Attorney General Van Winkle to use its influence on congress to recover the state's title to thousands of acres of land that were fraudulently obtained, it is claimed, by F. A. Hyde and associates many years ago. Mr. Van Winkle has so stated in a letter written to J. O. Bailey, Portland attorney and who formerly was assistant attorney general under George M. Brown and in charge of land fraud litigation for the state.

The lands were obtained by Hyde and his associates in 1898, but not until 1913 did the state awake to the fact that they had been obtained fraudulently, mainly through the dummy system.

A. M. Crawford, who was then attorney general, began suit and succeeded by a compromise arrangement in regaining title of the state to several thousand acres of the lands and over $40,000 in payments on lands that assignees were allowed to retain. Not long after this the Oregon supreme court handed down an opinion cancelling title to all the lands that had not been exchanged.

ed for federal lands, but holding that the courts were without jurisdiction over lands for which exchanges had been approved and title taken by the government. In his letter to Bailey, Van Winkle says that this decision blocked action by the courts and that action by congress is the only way the state can recover title. He agrees, however, to recommend that the state land board provide the necessary funds for the litigation if Bailey wants to undertake recovery through the courts, which Bailey has intimated he would like to do.

Van Winkle denies that his department has been lax in the cases, and points out that Bailey was personally in charge of the litigation for three years and that if there was any laxity Bailey is responsible.

Be Prepared For Coughs

Do not wait until an attack of "flu" is upon you. Take care of the little cough or cold and prevent the big one, or an attack of "flu." TAX BOARD BUSY WITH BUDGETS

Salem School District Asks Right To Levy Tax For $157,000

Salem school district No. 24 is asking the right to levy a tax of $157,000 and has filed the request with the budget for the next year in the office of the Marion county tax commission. A hearing on the budget will be held November 24, according to the notification sent W. H. Burkhardt, clerk of the board.

The estimated expenditures for the Salem district for the coming year are $269,500, according to the budget. Part of this is taken care of by the state and county apportionments and the elementary school millage tax.

The Marion county tax commission is holding daily sessions this week with a number of scheduled hearings. More than 30 of the school district budgets have been considered by the commission but none have been passed upon finally, according to Seymour Jones, chairman of the commission.

One Night of Basketball Is Scheduled This Week

With only one night open on the Commercial Basketball league series this week, a large crowd is expected to attend the games tonight between Anderson-Brown and Standard Oil and the Central Pharmacy and the Union Oil outlets. The next of the series will be played a week from tonight. Because of the displays for the Marion-Polk County Corn show and Industrial exhibit on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, no games were scheduled for Thursday night.

WORK RUSHED ON NEW BUILDINGS

Penitentiary Soon Ready To Resume Work on Flax, Warden Announces

Reconstruction work on the buildings damaged by the recent fire at the state prison is being rushed as fast as possible by a large crew of men and in a short time the manufacturing of flax will be resumed, according to Warden A. M. Dalrymple.

Concrete piers will give added strength to the walls of the north building, which was given over to the flax mill prior to the conflagration. Openings in the walls are being closed, and, as the floor is in fine condition, no work will be necessary there.

The remodeled building will be about half the size of that destroyed and will be partitioned off by a north and south wall. An added row of concrete pillars will support the roof of the building.

Many of the convicts are engaged in mixing mortar and cleaning brick. Debris is being hauled away in trucks, while a quantity of the machinery is being reconditioned by a local iron works. Much of this will be replaced in operation supplemented by some new equipment.

Huge planks are being used in a bridge near the old sawmill, which was a total loss. Most of these walls have been torn down and are being hauled out by the truck load.

Finishing touches on the new building outside the walls and east of the prison are now being made and the walls are ready for the roof, which will be placed in a few days. As soon as this building is completed the flax that is now being sheltered in temporary sheds will be transferred to the fire-proof structure.
