IN PRESENT QUOTA

Speakers Want Arrangements Different But Proposed Plans Different

tions in advocating methods of its execution. Industrialists and agriculturalists stood together in an appeal for selective immigration to obtain laborers for factories and farms. Administration forces, led by Assistant Secretary of Labor E. J. Henning, advocated further restrictions under the existing law, a view which is understood to have the approval of labor. Representatives of European nations, together with welfare organizations for immigrants from these countries, branded immigration restrictions as inhumane and urged that the bars be lifted. A change in the administrative features of the quota law to admit workers for the basic industries—agriculture and manufacturing—was demanded by Hal H. Smith of the Michigan Manufacturers association, Detroit, who said he reflected the views of industrialists, farmers and workers of the middle west. "Farmers as well as factories, have been denuded of cheap labor," he asserted "and so have been injured seriously." Asserting that employment threatened to become a menacing problem, Secretary Henning spoke for a further drastic reduction of the percentage quota, urging a change in the basis of limitation from the number of aliens admitted to the number of aliens naturalized. While selective immigration, based on the needs of the country, probably would serve the nation's interests best, he said, strict enforcement of a law, fixing definitely the number or percentage of aliens to be admitted, was absolutely essential. "United States consuls in foreign countries," Mr. Henning told the conference, should be given full power to pass upon applicants for admittance to this country. Then they should be directed to issue passports, giving preference first to wives, children and parents of naturalized American citizens or domiciled aliens, then to skilled labor of which there might be a shortage, and finally to common labor of the type most needed.
