He didn't get it. "Joe was just as calm as you are," continued Miss Normand's companion, "he fussed around the house, doing this and that. He's always fixing something - the radio or something-and he's always so quiet and good about it. Miss Normand came down and Joe took her over to Court's (Courtland Dines)."

"He left me there," interrupted

Miss Normand. "He didn't see

Court at all. I left the car and climbed the steps alone. Court answered the door. Edna was there. "'Come on, you dirty dogs,' I said; step into your dancing togs and let's go somewhere.' "Court said he didn't want to

At this point Mrs. Burns' narrative diverged decidedly from the This sale will be conducted by story told by Keily. The chaufvirtue of authority vested in me feur insists that during the teleas such receiver by an order of the phone conversation with Dines, Mrs. Burns held her hand over the transmitter and told him (Kelly) that Dines had said he would not permit Miss Normand to leave his apartment. "When I heard that I ran past Mrs. Burns and up the stairs to Miss Normand's bedroom, where I got the gun and put it in my overcoat," was the explanation Kelly made to the police.

Mrs. Burns declared that Kely's statement was not true. "He did not run upstairs," she said. "He could not go upstairs without passing right by me, and he certainly didn't do that. Jealousy Blamed package and he left as he usually eaves the house." Miss Normand also disagre with Greer's account of what happened at the telephone and immodiately afterward.

"He was just as calm as any-body could be. I gave him the

"Well!" she exclaimed heated "What business has the man got in my bedroom anyway? Now this is the truth-and if it isn't I hope I drop dead. That man has been in my room only twice: once to fix my curler, and once to fix an electric plug of some kind. How should he be so familiar with my room as to know where to go to get anything?"

When the interview closed, potheory that Greer, or Kelly, as he was known in the Normand household, must have admired Miss Normand from afar, after the nanner of film tang, and prohably sought employment with her in order to be near her; that he was a silent lover, fearing to betray his infatuation, but feeling it his duty to watch over and protect his employer; that he imagined himself performing an heroic deed when he drew the pistol and shot Dines.
